Thatcher plans to pursue her battle in Lords

Her comments in an article for the US magazine Newsweek that the prime minister was not his own man, that there was no such thing as Majorism and that he had merely adopted her princi-ples, dismayed Conservative backbenchers, one of whom said that the words "reeked of triumphalism".

While Downing Street and most cabinet members maintained silence, close support-ers of Mrs Thatcher, who is expected to be given a peer-age soon, said that this was only a taste of what was to come in the Lords. Simon Heffer, deputy editor of The Spectator, who is close to Mrs Thatcher, said: "I don't think that once she gets into the House of Lords she will feel under any compulsion to keep her mouth shut. BBC Radio 4, said: "I think this government has got to be very wary about being too thin-skinned about attacks on policies. This is not a personal attack on Mr Major. It is simply a reminder that Thatcherism as she sees it is a successful creed that liberated Britain from a high-tax, highinterference economy." Mr Heffer said that Mrs Thatcher was entitled to the same freedom of speech as any other politician. "I do not think there is anything sour in pointing out why a lot of people voted Tory two weeks

Among those angered by the article, William Powell, parliamentary private secre-tary to Michael Heseltine, the trade and industry minister, said that her remarks were intemperate, ill-judged and fundamentally wrong". Mrs Thatcher said in her article: "If new ministers pursue a policy of intervening in industry ... then the economy will go downhill again." Yesterday Mr Heseltine was unavailable for comment. But Mr Powell said: "I am not sure there is really something called Thatcherism. I think there is something called Conservatism, which for the most part she pursued. In some cases she went badly off the rails and Mr Major has had to correct them — and well done for doing so."

Downing Street indicated that Mr Major, who was at his home in Huntingdon yes-terday, had no intention of commenting on the article Mr Heffer, speaking on and was keen to damp down speculation on Mrs Thatcher's continuing intervention.

Douglas Hurd, the foreign secretary, speaking in Tur-key, said that it was useless to suppose that Mrs Thatcher would stop commenting when she thought comment was needed. "She played a stalwart part in the election campaign. She will play a stalwart part in commenting on the future life of the gov ernment." he said.

John Biffen, the former Commons leader who was dropped from the cabinet by Mrs Thatcher, said that prime ministers tended to be either those who went into dignified retirement, such as Lord Wilson and Lord Callaghan, or to be "those like Edward Heath, and I imagine Mrs Thatcher, who intend to be around for a while and to be pretty vigorous in their comments. He said: "Mrs Thatcher left her stamp on history. She isn't about to retire and do embroidery."

Mr Biffen said that it remained to be seen whether Mrs Thatcher would be as effective in the Lords as she had been until now in her public life. "At the end of the day, if the prime minister is able to navigate Britain out of recession without a resurrection of inflation, he will be fairly invincible to these

Gould seeks truce in attack over leadership

BY PHILIP WEBSTER

BRYAN Gould's campaign team is pressing for a truce in the Labour leadership contest to prevent personal attacks handing ammunition to the party's opponents.

The move emerged yester-day amid complaints of alleged attempts by supporters of John Smith to undermine Mr Gould's credibility by suggesting that it would be difficult for Mr Smith to work with him as his deputy. Mr Gould is standing both for the leadership and deputy leadership and weekend re-ports suggested that the Smith camp felt that it would be hard for the two men to work together because of their sharply differing views on the economy and Europe. The reports prompted an

Killer executed after four hours of legal wrangling

ROBERT Alton Harris became the first person to be executed in California for 25 years shortly before dawn yesterday after an agonizing last minute legal wrangle.

Harris's scheduled
12.01am (local time) execution was postponed for nearly four hours after three stays were granted and subsequently overturned by the US Supreme Court. Harris looked set to meet his fate at 4.01am. But an unexpected call issuing a stay from a US appellate judge came through just after Harris had already been strapped in for 12 min-utes and the official witnesses were waiting to watch him meet his death. The Supreme Court, after 13 years of hearing appeals over Harris, who was convicted of the double murder in 1978 of two teenage boys. issued what California's attomey general Dan Lund-gren described as "an unprecedented move" by pronouncing that no subsequent stay would be valid over Harris unless issued by the US Supreme Court itself.

After the execution of Harris the Foreign Office is to be asked to make representations on behalf of a British man who faces the death penalty in America. Kenny Richey, 27, from Edinburgh, expects to hear within the next four weeks whether a emerged with 21-year-old Scots TUC backs calls for referendum on constitution

BY KERRY GILL

PUBLIC pressure in Scotland for a referendum on the country's future constitution grew yesterday when the Scottish TUC overwhelmingly backed a motion calling on the government to organise one without delay. The Labour Party and the Liberal Democrats have already demanded a multi-option referendum organised by the government. The Scottish National Party, whose leaderh had been barred from addressing the STUC's annual conference in Perth, later made a similar demand but went further. It declared that if Mr Major were to refuse the call, Scots endum no later than the beginning of next year.

The two demands followed a day in which the conference was dominated by calls for the constitutional issue to be resolved at the ballot box. Charles Gray, leader of Strathclyde council, said years of political unrest and civil disobedience would follow if the government ignored the aspirations of the Scottish public. Local authorities and the public would not tolerate further edicts from Westminster which could lead to the loss of thousands of jobs, said Mr Gray. Scots would not remain passive until the turn of the

Gould canvasses Smith faithful

By KERRY GILL

BRYAN Gould cut a rather lonely figure yesterday at the annual conference of the Scottish TUC. He spent almost three hours sitting by himself in the gallery of Perth city hall listening to the debate on the future constitution of Scotland.

Later, after witnessing the fervour of delegates demanding a referendum on the issue, Mr Gould disclosed that he had come to favour an all-British constitutional convention that would address all aspects of government, including the possible eventual introduction of regional government throughout Britain. Mr Gould spent Monday night canvassing support among Scottish trades unionists, many of whom are probably natural supporters of the Argyll-born John Smith. Mr Gould insisted, though, that he was not facing defeat in his battle for the Labour party leadership. "Not a single constituency party has yet met, let alone voted. No trade union has yet decided how to deal with consulting the ballot of their members. It is very early stages," he said. His campaign is fuelled by

There was no rush from delegates for Mr Gould's ear, aithough he did meet Roger Lyons, of the Manufacturing, Science and Finance union before catching his train back to London. It is clear that Scotland will not be fertile ground for his leadership campaign: no one in Scotland is more popular than than John Smith within process again.

Later, also in Perth, SNP leader Alex Salmond offered an olive branch to the STUC allow him to address the conference. He said he would invite Campbell Christie, STUC general secretary, to join him in talks over a referendum.

"The SNP is willing to talk to all those who are genuine about holding a multi-option referendum. I therefore intend to ignore the snub from union barons and sectarian Labour politicians and con-tinue to seek common ground," he said.

He believed the chance of Mr Major approving a referendum was "infinitesimal" and that this issue should be got out of the way so that a committee of eminent Scots could organise a popular

Most STUC speakers and delegates said they were disappointed that the organrefused to invite Mr Salmond to address the conference. Many of them called for unity among all parties seeking constuttional change. Bob McCreadie, vice-chairman of the Scottish Liberal Democrats, said the campaign for a referendum would achieve nothing if the groups backing it were divided. But the government would achieve nothing by try-ing to tinker with the consti-tution in an attempt to buy off the campaign for home rule. More meetings of the Scottish Grand Committee or the re-formation of a Scottish Select Committee were tooth-

Rise in Easter sales fuels hope of economic revival

By PETER VICTOR

RETAILERS yesterday reported a rise in spending over Easter, strengthening the growing confidence that the economy is on the mend. Some stores estimated. takings to be as much as 50 per cent up on the previous Easter, with more sales of items such as furniture and household electrical goods.

Texas, the DIY company, said that Easter sales for some products were 25 per cent up on last year, while House of Fraser, which operates 56 department stores in the UK, including Harrods, reported "very encouraging" trading. Habitat reported an increase in household furniture sales "in line with the general mood in the high street". Some retailers were more cautious. Perhaps fearing to tempt fate by declaring a rise in sales, they said that they would wait to see what happens in the next few months. Sears Group, which owns Selfridges, and the Wallace, Warehouse and Miss Selfridge clothing stores, said that sales this Easter were up, but would not put a figure on ing a bit more confident with the election out of the way," a spokeswoman said. Violent advert is a warning shot

A VIOLENT commercial about the dangers of broad-casting violent television programmes when children may be watching is to be broadcast this week on peaktime independent television to give viewers a clearer picture about where to complain if a programme, or a commercial, causes offence.

The commercial is one of three by the Independent Television Commission (ITC), which is using, free of charge, £500,000 worth of promotional airtime on IIV, Channel 4 and satellite channels in the next three weeks to raise awareness of its regulatory role over them. It shows a terrified boy sitting on a couch watching as a man is murdered in front of him. The scene then switches to the television screen as the killer points a gun at the boy. David Glencross, the commission's chief executive, said that it had decideed, after "considerable discussion", that the scene would best illustrate the hazards of violence on television before the 9pm family viewing wa-tershed. The commercial itBroadcasting Standards Council. Asked whether the council could uphold a com-plaint against the ITC commercial, a spokesman said: "I don't think so ... Spain to release foreign prisoners

Hundreds of convicted Brit-ish prisoners in Spain may be freed soon as part of a drive to ease prison overcrowding (Richard Ford writes).

Up to 3,000 foreign in-mates serving sentences of less than six years will be released over the next few months, Antoni Asuncion, Spain's secretary-general for prison affairs, announced. On release they would be deported as undesirables. The Foreign Office estimate that there are 455 British nationals in Spanish prisons. almost 60 per cent of whom are being held for drugs-re-lated offences. The British government has been taken by surprise at the announcement and last night had no details of how many people would be released or how they would be returned.

Keith Best, director of Prisoners Abroad, which helps people jailed in foreign countries, said that most of the complaints against the Spanish criminal justice system concerned the length of time before a person stood trial and conditions in Spanish jails.

Tributes pour in for 'comic master

BENNY Hill was accused by some feminists of sexism and was dropped by Thames Television. But he found legions of new fans when his shows were sold to the United States. The reclusive American singer Michael Jackson yesterday added his tribute to the comedian's work. "I was fortunate in meeting Benny Hill on my recent trip to London," he said. "The world is suffering a great loss of a great talent.

Paradoxically, Benny Hill's seaside postcard humour became more popular abroad than at home. In a recent interview, the comedian said: "The biggest kick I get is being approached by people in France Spain, Italy or Greece who love what I do." Yesterday, Don Taffner, who introduced Benny Hill to American televison, said: "He was a genius, a perfectionist, and a very nice man. He appealed to audiences all over the world because he spoke the simple language of com-

A post-mortem examina-tion yesterday disclosed that the comedian had died of a heart attack over the Easter holiday weekend. Police, alerted by anxious neigh-bours, found Mr Hill on Monday evening after they broke into his flat at Teddington, southwest

Dr Ravindra Fernando, who carried out the examination, thought that the comedian had been dead for about two days. The coroner's office at Kingston hospital, south-west London, where the examination was conducted, gave the cause of death as coronary thrombosis. In February, Mr Hill was treated for neart illness at the Brompton hospital, central London.

"He used to come for about a week at the end of June or in July. He would never stay in a hotel. He was happy to be in the guest room here. It was quiet and nobody bothered him. He always took her out and pushed her along the front in her wheelchair," Ms Garrison said.

"Phoebe is very upset. She has lost a very dear friend. They met first when she asked for Benny's autograph. It is a remakable story of friendship and devotion between two people from completely different worlds brought together by chance. Phoebe never took the prospect of an inheritance very seriously," she

Ms Garrison spoke to the comedian on the telephone several weeks ago to tell him Miss King had been admitted to hospital. "He was obviously very ill and he sounded like a very frightened man. He told me he could not walk ten steps without someone to help him." she said.

Nell Warner, aged 80, yesterday described her late daughter as Mr Hill's biggest fan. They met in the sixties when she saw his show a Great Yarmouth. "They were very great friends. His agent said Benny was devastated when he heard she was dead," she said yesterday.

Mrs Warner told how Jeanette read newspaper reports last year of the comedian's plans to leave her a fortune in his will. "I don't want Benny's money, I just want Benny," she said at the

A DURHAM police marksman yesterday shot and wounded a gunman who had kept police at bay for 47 hours as he held his woman friend hostage in a terraced Darlington house.

Minutes after the police opened fire Keith Pringle, 24, was carried out of the house heavily bloodstained. Last night police said that Mr Pringle had been hit in the face with a single shot taken Middlesborough general hospital. The wound did not screaming frantically. Armed police stormed the building from the front and side, with three running into the house. One policeman came out carrying Leanne, screaming hysterically, under his arm

lance arrived and two paramedics went into the house. An armed came out carrying a shotgun and Mr Pringle was brought out by police on a chair stretcher.

The siege started when Leanne's mother Pauline, 43, was shot as she left the nouse on Sunday afternoon. Earlier Pringle's close friend, Jason Ward, 20, of Neasham Road, Darling-ton, was shot on the ouskirts of the town. Mrs Rees, who had facial wounds, was said to be in a satisfactory condition in Middlesbrough general hospital, where Mr Ward was said to be "comfort-

For more than a century and a half, Patek Philippe has been known as the finest watch in the world. The reason is very simple. It is made differently. It is made using skills and techniques that others have lost or forgotten. It is made with attention to detail very few people would notice. It is made, we have to admit, with a total disregard for time. If a particular Patek Philippe movement requires four years of continuous work to bring to absolute perfection. we will take four years. The result will be a watch that is unlike any other. A watch that conveys quality from first glance and first touch. A watch with a distinction: generation after generation it has been worn, loved and collected by those who are very difficult to please; those who will only accept the best. For the day that you take delivery of your Patek Philippe, you will have acquired the best. Your watch will be a masterpiece, quietly reflecting your own values. A watch that was made to be treasured.

Wanted man's fiancée jailed for wasting police time

By RICHARD FORD AND CRAIG SETON

THE fiancee of a man wanted for questioning about the killing of a recruiting ser-geant in Derby was jailed for six weeks yesterday for wasting police time.

Catherine Ogle, 22, a hotel kitchen assistant, admitted making calls to police telling them that three men wanted in connection with the shooting were on Guernsey in the Channel Islands. She had made calls to police hunting the killer of Sergeant Michael Newman who was shot in the head last week as he left a recruiting office.

Detectives in Derby are still seeking more information about the escape route used by the three men involved in the attack. The men abandoned their car a quarter of a mile from where the soldier was shot and then ran almost a quarter of a mile, being seen by many people. But there the

Ogle, whose address was given as care of Le Chene Hotel, Guernsey, had tele-phoned the police in Derby to say that the men they wanted to interview were in Guernsey, magistrates on the island were told yesterday.

Derby police have named the men as Joseph Magee, 26, said in court to be Ogle's fiance and originally from Armagh City, Northern Ire-land, Declan Duffy, 19, and Anthony Gorman, 22, both originally from Belfast.

Ogle admitted wasting 1,287 man hours of police officers' time by making the calls. Inspector David Noyon, told the court that a taperecording of one call was played to Ogle and she had reluctantly admitted that the voice on the tape was hers. Pauline Allen, for the defence, said that Ogle was prepared to leave the island immediately. She had little money and the maximum fine for the offence was £1,000. Anthony Gillett, the magistrate, said an immedi-ate custodial sentence was needed.

Yesterday Don Dovaston, an assistant chief constable of Derbyshire, said that the last positive sighting of the three men wanted for questioning was in Salisbury Street in a residential area of Derby, but that there was no evidence that they had escaped in a second car. He said: "I would have thought it was rather strange to abandon one vehide and not take to another." The men could still be in Derby or could have fled elsewhere. As the police search continued, a West Country racehorse trainer spoke of em-ploying Mr Magee for two months last year. Bob Manning said that he had em-ployed Mr Magee after placing an advertisement in the Sporting Life newspaper. Mr Magee worked at the stables at Winterbourne, near Bristol, for two months before he quit last April to return to his girl friend and baby in

Mr Manning said: "He kept ringing up and asking for a job and gave us a bit of a sob story and we took him on. He was such a nice, quiet, pleasant lad. There are quite a lot of Irish lads in racing."

A jockey who was friendly with Mr Magee said that he mixed perfectly in the racing world. "He had a Northern Irish accent and made no bones about the fact he came from Armagh. But he never Sergeant Newman's

Thatcher insists that her way is the right way forward for Britain

MARGARET Thatcher's warning to John Major in the American magazine Newsweek repeats many of the principles she held sacro-sanct and which are largely ignored by the newly elected government.

In the two-page article she argues for adhering to her legacy and rejecting the notion that there could exist such a thing as Majorism. The former prime minister begins by declaring: "People are asking is John Major free to go his own way?" That, she will allow, but only on condition that he follows on condition that he follows Conservative party princi-ples, those that she set out before the Conservatives

Rejecting the idea that Mr Major is his own man, Mrs Thatcher points to her own achievements over eleven and a half years which fundamentally changed Britain, "ridding it of the debilitating, negative aspects of socialism". Pointing to the unique character of the British, and thereby including a jibe at those who would grown us as Europeans she says it had been buried under the "terrible creed" of socialism. "Our task as Conservatives was to uncover the enterprise, uncover this remarkable character. We didn't discover it. We knew it was there: we had great faith that although it had been smothered and strangled, if we got the laws right again, the spirit of enterprise would re-emerge. It took time."

Repeating her strongly held belief that socialism destroys a sense of responsi-bility. Mrs Thatcher issues the warning "Now they've got to be jolly careful they don't give government too many extra powers and undo what I've done."

In a paragraph which hints at her own hurt at being attacked for her attitude to public services, she reasserts the need to generate wealth to increase the resources available for the health serminder that the last govern-ment reduced the share of national income represented by government spending to below 40 per cent. below 40 per cent.

Turning her attention to those "two or three" new ministers who would intervene in industry, although not mentioning Michael Heseltine, the trade and industry secretary, by name, Mrs Thatcher warns that such a policy would lead the economy downhill. "The task of government is to have of government is to have sound finance: keep public expenditure and borrowing down. Otherwise, govern-ment is taking away the very resources that industry needs to invest and grow. Investment can only come from savings."

She argues that many new MPs share her orthodox views on finance and says that the greatest danger to government in Britain "is having too many elected representatives who think they make their reputation or keep their seats by securing an extra chunk of public spending for their own con-stituency or cause".

Denouncing socialism and the Labour party as attrac-tive only to those who do not want to use initiative and who approve of carving up other people's wealth to give to those who do not use their own talent, Mrs Thatcher notes that socialism is being rejected the world over. Some Third World propaganda suggests that all that is wrong is the distribution of wealth, but she warns that they are "siren voices".

Although no longer in the driving seat, she makes clear that she still wishes to map the route. "Thatcherism will live. It will live long after Thatcher has died, because we had the courage to restore the great principles and put them into practice, in keepthem into practice, in keep-ing with the character of the people and the place of this that their relationship had not interfered with their work. He said: "We took pains to be very discreet." The tribunal was told that Mr Tan promoted Mrs Zao from secretary to sales manager shortly after their affair began in February 1990. He denied the promotion was as a result of the affair.

The group's directors be-came disenchanted with the performance of the three-per-son office when it came bot-tom of their international sales league table. Ricky Ang. a director, wrote to the pair after their affair had been disclosed saying: "The sales performance of your office was the worst of all the sales teams for the year 1989/90. performance figures. The case continues today.

Teachers seek more help to curb pupil violence

By MATTHEW D'ANCONA, EDUCATION REPORTER

DISRUPTIVE pupils pose a threat to educational standards and classroom harmony that the government and local authorities have yet to address properly. Britain's second largest teaching union claimed yesterday.

The National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers voted unanimously at its conference in Scarborough to condemn the lack of support offered to schools facing disruptive behaviour. Delegates demanded that teachers be consulted before excluded pupils were readmitted to ordinary lessons. Members of the union at Bishop Llandaff School. Cardiff, went on strike for eight days last year after the readmittance of three boys accused of sexual assault.

Jim West, of the Solent, proposing the motion, said that stress-related illness was abnormally common among teachers and many faced ugly disciplinary crises every day at work. "Too often the education of the majority of our pupils is hindered by the disruptive behaviour of the few," he said.

Steve Illingworth, from Bradford, said that many parents were too indulgent towards children who needed to be taken in hand. "We find John Patten, our education secretary, asking us to remind pupils that God doesn't like them to be naughty," he said. "Somehow I don't think that's going to work."

The motion reflects disquiet in the teaching profession at the increase in violence in the classroom. The Elion Report commissioned by the government in 1988 found that almost 2 per cent of teachers faced acts of physical aggression each week. The number of places in local authority special schools and however, forcing many schools to readmit pupils or pay for home tuition.

Nigel de Gruchy, the union's general secretary, said that making parents liable for pupils' behaviour would solve nothing. Local authorities had to recognise their responsibility to schools and budget accordingly.

☐ While the National Union of Teachers has toyed this week with a radicalism reminiscent of the mid 1980s, the moderate NAS/UWT is cultivating an image of studied pragmatism at its

The union is faced with a new educational landscape of delegated budgets, opt-out schools and league tables, which it dislikes but is learning to accept. Calls for reform of government policy are more likely than demands for outright abolition, and the proposals for a national boycott of teachers' assessment and industrial action over classroom size face an uphill struggle.

Yesterday the executive easily fended off an amendment calling for the abolition of local management of schools which gives each school responsibility for its wages and costs. Instead a more pragmatic motion was passed stressing the continuing role of local authorities and calling for teachers' pay to be funded on the basis of actual costs rather than average

Delegates also voted yesterday against the publication of exam results in league table form as is now required by the Parents Charter. The union appeared, however, to give implicit approval to league tables which took proper account of social and economic factors and measured the "value added" to pupils' performance by each school.

New DPP to fight for court reform

THE new Director of Public Prosecutions started work yesterday, vowing to continue to press for lawyers in the Crown Prosecution Service to be given rights of audience in the higher courts. Barbara Mills, QC, took up her £77.000-a-year appointment as the first woman DPP in succession to Sir Allan Green, QC, who resigned last year after kerb-crawling allegations. Mrs Mills, aged 51, for-merly director of the Serious

The boy was forced to lie face down on the ground, his hands were tied behind his back and he was blindfolded with a balaclava. His sister was blindfolded with a handkerchief and taken further

The boy wriggled free and ran screaming to his parents who were searching for the children. The father shouted his daughter's name and she appeared over the dunes 200 yards away.

The father chased the attacker but he fled towards the Royal Birkdale golf course and disappeared. Police believe he was carrying an imitation handgun.

Holidays and weekends are the worst times to be ill

BY NIGEL HAWKES, SCIENCE EDITOR

PATIENTS needing operary into Perioperative Deaths, tions should avoid falling ill at weekends or on public holidays. They will also stand a better chance if they have their operations when full-time staff, rather than locum surgeons or anaesthetists, are working.

A report into nearly 19,000 deaths that happened in 1990 within 30 days of surgery has identified failings in treatment and management of patients. Overall, the report says, the death rate is very low, 0.7 per cent of all operations, but it could be lower.

The enquiry, funded by the health department, has been carried out with the collaboration of the medical colleges and associations. It covers deaths after operations throughout the UK excluding Scotland.

Cancer drug found in Himalayan trees

By NICK NUTTALL, TECHNOLOGY CORRESPONDENT

A SCIENTIST whose mother and grandmother died from cancer of the ovaries has discovered large quantities of an anti-cancer drug in the leaves of a Himalayan tree.

The drug, called taxol, is identical to the substance that was found in the bark of the Pacific yew and which tests in America indicate can control the growth of a wide variety of tumours including breast, lung and ovarian cancers.

In its review of a Pennsylvania law — which imposes a 24-hour waiting period on women who want a termination and requires a husband to be notified of a pregnancy — the court is likely to make a ruling that will grant states a virtual free hand in framing legislation on abortion.

Louisiana and Utah have already passed laws banning abortion, and several other states have enacted legislation restricting access to abortion. Eleven states are poised to pass bans, depending on the Supreme Court's decision. Pro-choice advocates and opponents of abortion are agreed that the conservative-dominated Supreme Court will use the opportunity to destroy the legal framework for abortion established by the court's 1973 Roe versus Wade ruling.

The Bush administration has put its weight behind the Pennsylvania law. "In our view, a state's interest in protecting foetal life throughout pregnancy outweighs a woman's liberty interest in abortion," the administration's Solicitor General has informed the court.

Kathryn Kolbert, a lawyer for the American Civil Liberties Union who will present the case against the Pennsylvania law on behalf of several abortion rights groups, said she was pessimistic about her chances. "I can count votes as as well as anyone."

as well as anyone."

The Pennsylvania law requires doctors to advise any woman seeking a termination about alternatives to abortion. Most of this advice must be given 24 hours before an abortion. Under the law, a girl aged under 18 needs the permission of a parent or judge before having an abortion, and a married woman must notify her husband about her intention.

Anti-abortion groups have increasingly tried to switch the debate about abortion to the need for measures requiring parental consent before minors can have terminations. Opinion polls have shown that even people who favour access to abortion support the idea of parental consent. The anti-abortion groups have also used the parental consent argument to break down established legal principles supportive of abortions.

As the Supreme Court has become steadily more conservative, the justices have been lowering the threshold for state restrictions on abortion. In 1986, the court was still paying homage to the 1973 Roe v. Wade ruling, stating that "a woman's right to make that choice is fundamental". But in a Missouri case it reviewed in 1989, the court decided that states could impose restrictions as long as an "undue burden". defined vaguely, was not placed on a woman's right to abortion. The effect of the ruling was to allow Missouri to restrict the use of public money, medical personnel and facilities for abortions.

If the court re-affirms its "undue burden" principle, then the Pennsylvania law will survive, but sweeping bans as enacted in Louisiana and Utah will fall. However, if the justices decide that there must simply be a rational basis for any restriction, then the constitutional protection provided by the 1973 ruling will collapse. Four of the nine Supreme Court justices have indicated that they support a hands-off approach.

Militant Christians stir up passions

By Jamie Dettmer

IN FARGO, North Dakota, Dr Alan Lindenann has delided not to perform abortions after tellow doctors told him that his family would be harned if he continued.

This is just one example of the intolerance sweeping America over the abortion issue. Activists on both sides see themselves as heirs to the civil rights movement of the 1960s and, as then, exhibit an astonishing level of passion and conviction.

In Buffalo, New York state, on Monday a two-week campaign started which is designed to force the closure of the town's three abortion clinics. It is mounted by Operation Rescue, a fundamentalist group, and could lead to violence. In Wichita, Kansas.

last year, Operation Rescue's activities led to 3,000 arrests.

The Lambs of Christ is one of the most feared of the direct action groups. They have made North Dakota into a virtual abortion-free state. Only two doctors are prepared to perform abortions and that is because both of them live outside the state and fly in to staff the Woman's Health Centre in Fargo. Susan Wickland, one of the doctors, and her family are protected by a security firm and her children suffer harassment on the street.

In the end, whether a woman can get an abortion could well depend as much on these groups as on the Supreme Court or a state

Locked in debate: supporters and opponents of the death penalty arguing outside the main gate of San Quentin prison. About 2,000 opponents had protested outside the jail, but by the time Harris was executed yesterday, only about 30 protesters were keeping vigit

Death row frenzy seizes America as media circus overrides moral debate

ELEVENTH-HOUR and ultimately unsuccessful appeals to save the life of Robert Alton Harris, convicted of killing two teenagers in 1978, merely heightened the morbid public and media obsession with his fate that so gripped the West Coast of the United States during the Easter holiday weekend.

The frenzy surrounding Harris, who finally died in the gas chamber yesterday, will come as no surprise to 19th-century or 18th-century social historians. The scale of the media circus that has descended on the little seaside village of San Quentin, over which the prison looms like a giant concrete sand castle, raises invertable speculation about whether such interest has more to do with popular entertainment than public justice.

Executions were traditionally held on public holidays. perhaps in the belief that everyone was like Boswell, who confided to his London Journal that he had "a horrid ing executions to the inside of prisons coincided with the rise of the mass media, which has ensured that they remain a public spectacle. For the 48 hours leading up to Harris's execution, the California radio waves were dominated by phone-in shows discussing methods of execution, with recollections of how public hangings were a weekly Friday morning event in San Francisco in the early part of the century.

In The Executioner's Song, Norman Mailer's exhaustive account of Gary Gilmore's execution in 1977, there is a macabre moment that catches the extent of the media's appetite for executions. When journalist Larry Schiller, who had struck a cheque-book deal with Gilmore for his exclusive story, gets inside the prison at dawn for his last interview he realises he has

Obsession with the death penalty in America cannot be described simply as a search for order amid chaos or as fear of a rising crime rate, William Cash reports from San Quentin forgotten his notebook. He is forced to scrawl Gilmore's last words on the back of real cheques.

Over the past week, the Los Angeles Times introduced a quirky "Execution Journal" column from San Quentin which has reported on how television producers have offered thousands of dollars to locals for the right to park their satellite vans in driveways and turn bungalows into round-the-clock "death watch" headquarters. Local newspapers featured hourglasses on "Execution Count-

In June last year a federal judge ruled against a San Francisco television station that came close to being allowed to film the execution.

The grounds for the court's decision were that the broadcast would provoke a frenzy among inmates with access to receivers. Earlier this month a Fox TV special called Live! From Death Row was broadcast. It parodied a ficticious tabloid television show that nirns tragedy into early evening entertainment.

But America's obsession with capital punishment when the practice has been abandoned by much of the industrialised Western world cannot simply be explained as fear of ever-growing crime rate. Texas, where murder rates are below the national average, has recently been executing an average of nearly one death-row inmate a Part of the modern appeal of executions in America is that they provide a form of communal focus for evil in a society where confidence in traditional sources of comfort for life's uncertainties, such as religion and the law, is at a record low. Executions are said to offer an illusion of order in a world seemingly out of control.

They also provide an element of social catharsis by reassuring the public that the system is working, which is especially relevant to California, where gang shootings in Los Angeles are endemic, despite its affluent, trend-setting image. Also, the video of the brutal beating of Rodney King lingers in the public mind as the televised trial of the police officers allegedly responsible drags on.

As John Carey, the Oxford critic, has argued, the media's obsession with death, from air crashes to obinuaries, is rooted in placating mankind's desire to place himself in the comforting position of a survivor. The only snag with the deluge of death that swamps newspapers and television sets is that it ultimately seems meaningless: it has no with moral point.

Or do they? If there was ever a case more appropriate for clemency, it must be Harris's. He was beaten and abused as a child, spent almost all his adult life in prison and suffered psychological impairment from foetal alcohol syndrome. He was born

On September 14, Kemper picked up a 15-year-old girl, raped her and decapitated her and buried the parts. On January 8, 1973, Edmund picked up a girl, killed her and took her body home and engaged in sex acts." The card concludes with an account of how he killed his mother.

Serial killers have been in vogue in America since last year's hit film The Silence of the Lambs, the tale of how a jailed cannibal helps in the bunt for another mass murderer. 'Are we no longer moved by the depravity exhibited by these individuals, or are we so insensitive that we can trade these cards as though they are portrayals of sports heroes?" asked a statement issued by Alan Hevesi, an assemblyman, and Senator Christopher Mega, the two New York legislators trying to re-strict their sale. "What message do these cards give to our young people?" The manufacturers, however, are unrepentant.

Sarajevo at the mercy of Serb guns

FROM ANNE MCELVOY IN BELGRADE

FULL-scale fighting erupted yesterday in Sarajevo, the capital of Bosnia-Herzegovina, as Serb forces pounded the city with mortar and rocket fire, securing an advance on the centre, held by Muslim and Croat forces. After three days of relative calm. Sarajevo residents were woken by the sound of sniper and machinegun fire. Shrap-nel littered deserted streets. The fighting flared despite efforts by the United States and Europe in the past few days to induce Serbia to end its involvement in the Bosnian conflict. The upsurge in hostilities has dealt a blow to hopes that the bloodshed can still be stemmed. Gun battles also raged around a building occupied by United Nations peace-keeping forces. Blue-helmet troops took up positions outside the building, exchanging their intended peace-keeping role for self-defence.

Rostov Ripper admits to being a flaw of nature

FROM RELITER IN MOSCOW

ANDREI Chikatilo, the Russian confessed serial killer and cannibal, described himself in court yesterday as "a mad beast" driven by a flawed nature to rape and slaughter rampages.

Shaven-headed and star-ing-eyed Mr Chikatilo testi-fied from a cage at his trial in the southern city of Rostov-on-Don. He told the court he murdered at least 55 people in a 10-year series of atrocities. In his first testimony, he acknowledged that he was the mystery attacker who stalked adolescents of both sexes, raping them and killing with a knife, a rope or his teeth.

Mr Chikatilo, aged 56, now dubbed "the Rostov Ripper", said that he was unsure how many victims he had slain in southern Russia, Ukraine and Uzbekistan. "Possibly 55, maybe more," he told the judge, Tass reported.

Tense courtroom sessions broken by the distraught weeping of female relatives, have heard that the former schoolteacher raped and slaughtered teenagers and ate their sexual organs. "I am a mistake of nature, a mad beast," Mr Chikatilo said.

The trial began last week with an outburst from the prisoner that he had been denied a chance to speak on his own behalf. Gristy evidence from the prosecution has occupied the trial till now. Mr Chikatilo was arrested in 1990 for 53 murders and confessed to 55, showing police the burial places of eenagers whose deaths had gone unrecorded. WARSAW NOTEBOOK by Roger Boyes

Limo politicians bask in new status

R ipples of alarm spread through the Polish political class the other day when thieves snatched the red Peugeot of Tadeusz Mazowiecki, the former prime minister.

A police patrol spotted the car and gave chase through Warsaw's streets. Eventually the police car's engine blew a gasket: the rundown patrol vehicles are no match for the smart Western limousines of the new political establishment. Seizing the moment. a high-powered team of car-alarm salesmen infiltrated parliament and various party headquarters to ped-dle their sirens to worried politicians.

To travel in style is the great craving of statushungry governors in the east of Europe. Indeed, the first moral problem of the Solidarity government after taking power in 1989 was whether to accept a batch of Lancias ordered from Fiat by the communists, or whether to travel to work by tram. They chose the Lancias and initiated a car revolution. Politicians are no longer taken seriously un-less they have a four-door limousine at their command. The only difference

Mercedes. But at weekends he uses an air force jet to travel to Gdansk to visit his wife and eight children. The flight, says an official, is a routine training mission and the president is simply hitching a ride. It does not therefore figure on the presidential budget, which has been submitted to parliament -- about £16 million a year covering a staff of 230 and restoration of the kitchen of the Belvedere Palace. Even so, the suspicion remains that Poland could save some sorely needed money if the president's wife joined her husband in Warsaw.

The old political class preferred the train to the car. They had their Chaika limousines and 1960s, these government trains were the last word in hixury. The most enthusiastic train travellers were the first postwar party leaders, Boleslaw Bierut and Wlad-yslaw Gomulka. In those days a company of soldiers was positioned next to the leaders' carriages. Now the trains are protected only by an overweight dog and they languish on a siding in a Warsaw suburb.

In theory you can rent a special train for £4,000. plus mileage and the salaries of the drivers and the restaurant staff. Nobody has shown an interest. Some Western entrepreneurs, however, are closing in. One French businessman wants to make the trains a nucleus of a muse-of North Korea has taught his people that the divided Korean peninsula will be re-unified by 1995. Fears that that reunification might be achieved by war, and the real possibility that North Korea might have a nuclear weapon by that time, ensure that tension remains high along the 38th parallel, which Ronald Reagan, the former American president, used to call the frontier of freedom. Mr Kim has made reunification of the divided Korean pensinsula his life's ambion. He tried once before to achieve unity by military means and nothing really suggests he has entirely abandoned that option. The may well have contributed to the construction of the wall, ing the vast wall of concrete, 24ft high, 12ft wide at the top and 21 ft at the base, that the South Koreans and Americans have built across the whole width of the peninsula. Only the central six miles of the boundary between the countries is not sealed off by the structure.

The wall, banked and garlanded with greenery, is not visible from the southern side and that, say the Northerners, points to a determination to keep the country divided. The South says it is an anti-tank wall, while the North claims that any raw recruit knows the border is too hilly for tanks to operate satisfactorily.
But then the North makes no mention of one of the

the southern side of the border is still a fairly modest affair, the Korean People's Army has built a modern expressway all the way from Pyongyang to the border in what must be the record time of two and a half years. There is very little traffic on it. The first Westerner to traverse it, myself, saw only four vehicles during the whole of the northbound

Kabul offers to open gates for rebels

By Michael Binyon, diplomatic editor, AND ZAHID HUSSAIN IN ISLAMABAD

AFGHANISTAN'S acting Hatif's offer was quickly spurned by the fundamentalist Hezbi-I-Islami party of Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, whose forces are encamped south of the city and have threatened to attack if Kabul does not surrender to them. The guerrilla army of Pushtuns has been strength-ened by the defection of 500 government troops who have taken their tanks with them, according to Karim Bahar, holding territory north of Kabul and has promised not to attack while negotiations con-

FROM ANDREW FINKEL IN ANKARA

DOUGLAS Hurd yesterday urged Turkey to renew its commitment to provide operational support for Operation Provide Comfort, the air sur-veillance of northern Iraq designed to protect the Kurds from an Iraqi assault.

Mr Hurd, making his first trip abroad since being reappointed foreign secretary, was speaking one week after the allied forces demanded that President Saddam Hussein disarm missiles north of the 36th parallel. The foreign secretary is a welcome guest in Turkey, particularly after a German decision to impose an arms embargo as punishment for the use of German tanks to police Turkey's own Kurdish insurrection.

Turkey which has all but given up any hopes for immediate entry into the EC, is suspicious that the Kurdish issue is being exploited as a means of further distancing

Turkey from the Community. Mr Hurd's reference to Turkey as a "priority for Britain" and the need for a special relationship between Turkey and the EC was intended to go some way to allaying those fears. He called Turkey a "robust" member of the coalition against Saddam Hussein - a reference to his expectations that the Turkish parliament will renew the mandate to base allied aircraft in Turkey when the current agreement expires at the end of June.

Mr Hekmatyar, who says his forces are just 10 miles from Kabul, accused Mr Masood of betraying the blood of two million Afghans by entering an alliance with the communists. He also accused Iran of conspiring with Mr Masood and the present Kabul administration. Tehran a few months ago issued a fatwa for the killing of Mr Hemkatyar. Thousands of his supporters have reportedly left their bases in Pakistan for Afghanistan to reinforce their troops in the battlefield.

In Moscow, the Russian foreign ministry said yester-day that it was working close-ly with the United States and other countries to ensure the safety of its citizens and all foreign residents in Afghanistan. There were 147 citizens of the former Soviet Union in Afghanistan and "several dozen" prisoners of war. A Russian special envoy, an aide to Vice-President Aleksandr Rutskoi, is due in Kabul soon to discuss the fate of the prisoners of war, a highly emotive issue in Russia. Interfax news agency reported that more than 200 Afghan tribesmen had crossed into Turkmenistan on April 20 and refused to return, saying that they feared repression from the Mujahidin.

Five white MPs defect to ANC

FROM GAVIN BELL IN JOHANNESBURG

THE African National Congress gained its first effective representation in the South African parliament yesterday when five sitting members of the Democratic party joined its ranks and announced that they would support ANC policies as independents. The defection of the liberal politicians created both a precedent and a paradox. They cannot officially represent the ANC in parliament under the present constitution, which excludes blacks from the tricameral legislature, nor does the ANC wish them to because it has no desire to be associated with parliament in its present form. The ANC and its new recruits resolved the issue by saying they would retain their seats as independents, espousing ANC viewpoints where appropriate. This political sleight of hand did not impress Zach de Beer, the Democratic leader, who said the party would now formally expel the rebels. Dr de Beer accepted the defections philosophically, saying they would be no great loss to his party, and might be of some symbolic value to the ANC. The ANC said in a statement that it was delighted by the development, which enhanced its non-racial approach to politics in the postapartheid era.

Dave Dalling of Johannesburg, the erstwhile Demo-cratic party chief whip, was the most senior defector. The others were Jan van Eck and Jannie Momberg from Cape province, and Pierre Cronje and Rob Haweil from Natal. In a joint statement, they said they believed that their action was in the best interests of all South Africans.

The Democrats' representation in the 178-seat parliament is now reduced to 31. Its caucus will meet today to expel them formally.

FROM CHRISTOPHER WALKER IN CAIRO

LIKE the star of a Hollywood desert epic, Colonel Gaddafi, the flamboyant Libyan leader, yesterday arrived for talks in Egypt in a red fez and white robe riding in a white Cadillac which crossed the border in a 70-vehicle convoy.

Despite the showmanship, the meeting with President Mubarak in an army rest house and a tent pitched close to second world war battlefields at Sidi Barrani appeared to have had some diplomatic results. After it was over, Mr Mubarak came out alone and told reporters: There is a ray of hope. The matter needs work." The meeting was the first time that Colonel Gaddafi had left his country since sanctions were imposed on April 15. He was forced to make the border crossing by road because Egypt is one of the Arab countries that enforces the UN air embargo.

"Our talks were a continuation of meetings between us and Libya to get out of this current spot with the imposition of the air embargo," said the Egyptian president, who at times appears to have an tionship with the younger and more unpredictable Colonel Gaddafi. "We are consulting with a lot of parties. We hope to find a way out to bring things back to normal."
Mr Mubarak added without elaboration. Arab League foreign ministers are due to resume talks on the Lockerbie issue at an emergency session set for Cairo on April 28.

A few hours before Colonel Gaddafi's arrival, the Egyptian authorities at the border detained a Libyan trying to enter Egypt with a pistol and 18 bullets hidden in his clothes. A senior Egyptian official said the matter was being investigated.

Arab diplomatic sources said Mr Mubarak was anxious for a compromise solution as he is convinced that the sanctions screw will eventually be tightened, increasing the chances of instability throughout the region.

Before the desert summit opened, the semi-official Cairo daily Al Ahram said: "It is ecoming almost certain that if Libya does not meet all the items of the UN resolution, the next sanctions consolidated step will be the imposition of an oil embargo."

Submerged or levitated, the guru's doing fine

Yapan's most famous J guru, Shoko Asahara, sat in state on a giant pink pouffe greeting his disciples and visitors. As the queue snaked slowly forward, it became clear why one of Mr Asahara's unshod feet was extended before him on a velvet stool. Every worshipper, as he approached the master, knelt down to kiss his proffered big toe. While such behaviour is expected of those paying homage to the guru, nonworshipping visitors fortunately are allowed to stick to a more traditional Japanese greeting and offer a business card. Mr Asahara is the leader of a Buddhist cult known as Aum Shinrikyo, or The Supreme Truth Sect, which was set up in 1986. The sect is one of dozens of new religions that are attracting crowds

Young Japanese are exchanging their rigid society for a new Buddhist cult, Joanna Pitman reports from Tokyo of young Japanese who have summoned the courage to walk away from the rigid constraints of corporate life. Aum Shinrikyo's 7,000 followers pledge their devotion to the guru by drinking a small amount of his blood and a concoction brewed from a clipping of his abundant hair. Most important ly, they place all their ral bank account. Enthroned on his capanodded languidly as the faithful one by one kissed his toe. His long, lank hair

"Welcome to the heavenly light of Aum Shinrikyo. feel yours are positive waves, he intoned, somewhat put out that his for-eign visitor had not knelt to honour the toe. It was a short interview. Mr Asahara, 37, switched back into his trance as quickly as he had emerged from it. Ac-cording to his disciples, the guru is going blind and has over-exerted himself practising the austerities that he preaches. But visitors are assured that Mr Asahara has per-formed miracles. Mahaher name along with her worldly possessions when she joined the sect four years ago, is a fervent believer in his spiritual pow-ers. "The Master has performed many enlight-ened acts. For example, he has sat in a tank of water. submerged without air for over 12 hours. He survived because he has mystic powers. I am in training to be able to do that too."

Mahamaya left her job in the prestigious Sumitomo Chemical company to become a disciple after hearing of the move-ment from a friend. Her husband and two daughters, six and two, have also joined. Now they are going through an early learner's induction course in meditation and yoga. The six-year-old spends most of the day er, listening to New Age music on a Sony Walkman. One day she wants to perform levitation like the guru and when she grows up would like to learn to imitate his cotton-eating talents. A photograph at the sect's Tokyo headquarters shows the guru apparently swallowing length after length of white fabric. Apparently his record stands at four yards of damask. Aum Shinrikyo disciples, in joining the sect, have shrugged off all the con-straints of Japanese society. No longer do they need to conform. They can behave wildly (for Japanese) by growing their hair and joining in the rituals. But once a non-conformist in Japan, always so. Any disenchanted disciple will have trouble regaining acceptance in ordinary society.

The doctrine of hellfire has more to do with hatred of others than with fear

ohn Patten last week urged that greater fear of Hell and damnation, prompted by a rather stronger whiff of fire and brimstone from church pulpits, would prevent people from taking

As a participant on the prochoice side in the abortion controversy now raging in the Repub-lic of Ireland. I think I have probably more personal experi-ence of the verbal application of fire and brimstone than Mr Patten. Take the following passage, from a letter which reached me last week from Co. Kerry:

"O'Brien, you will be sorry one day, when you meet a MAN bigger than you and he will say to you DEPART O'BRIEN IN-TO EVERLASTING FIRE TO turn to the UNBORN BABIES murdered by you to bring a drop of cold water and place it on your tongue to cool it in the flames of hell. You know the answer the little babies will give you. You murdered us. We are now very happy. You are now getting your reward - fire

The letter is signed with a number of women's first names: "Marie", "Patsy", "Joan", "Phylis", "Michelle".

Mr Patten, and those who think like him, should note that the emotion which the idea of Hell induces in these devotees is not fear. The idea that they might be selves, because of the hatred that has them in its grip. clearly does not occur to them for a moment Hell, for them, is a place in which persons who contradict them, in throughout eternity. So conceived, Hell is clearly a most enjoyable idea. One of the church fathers — Tertullian, I think - taught that the bliss of the saints in Heaven is increased by the contemplation of the sufferings of the damned below in Hell. My correspondents in Co. Kerry are clearly enjoying a foretaste of that bliss.

I suspect that the emotion most widely and vividly aroused by the idea of Hell has always been vindictive joy, rather than fear. "Hell is for the others" was the leitmotiv of the controversies of minds steeped in traditional the ages of faith. There must Christian theology are capable of who were afraid of Hell as something that might happen to themselves personally. That cate-gory would include many of the timid and the depressed, the sick and the dying, plus a few others: notably certain Calvinist divines and other introspective intellectuals. It is not, however, from such groups that potential criminals are drawn. For a vigorous and extroverted young man or woman contemplating the advantages to be derived from a career of crime or sin, I doubt whether the idea of Hell ever operated as a deterrent. even when that idea was most fervently promulgated from the pulpits of the various churches.

Take the hypothetical case of a young man weighing the benefits and risks of becoming a highwayman around, say, 1650, when Hell was in its heyday. How high would the risk of hellfire rank in the mind of the potential highwayman, compared with the sublunary risk of being hanged drawn and quartered if caught? Pretty low down. I imagine. Such a young man would not have attended church very much as a boy and would not have paid much attention to what he heard there. If he took Hell seriously at all, he would have learned that the sinner could avoid it by repentance after he had made his pile. Meanwhile, there was a more serious matter to attend to: dodging the gallows. Bear in mind that the ages of faith, far from relying on Hell as a deterrent to crime, applied far more ferocious material deterrents than are available in our own less Hell-reliant culture.

Mr Patten's thoughts about the social utility of fire-and-brimstone theology, no doubt evolved during his period, now happily conclu-ded, as junior Home Office minister. The thoughts may have been prompted by a desire - professionally understandable in the circumstances - to lay the blame for rising crime-rates, since 1980, at the door of the churches, rather than of the government. However that may be, I hope Mr Patten will "Patsy", refrain from pursuing that line of > trusted with higher responsibilities, as Secretary of State idea of fire and brimstone as deterrents from crime is simply harmless nonsense. But this line of thinking, if it could be applied in the field of education, would have pernicious effects.

The traditional

thought now that he has been en-about Hell has always had a tendency to boggle the vision of hell inspired him minds of those who took it seriously. The idea of an infinitely loving and com-passionate God who tortures throughout eternity those who have incurred His disapproval is inherently difficult. It is certainly stimulating to the imagination: whether of Dante on one level, or of my Kerry correspondents on another. I wouldn't want the imagination of my own children to be stimulated in that way, and I hope Mr Patten does not intend to nudge British education in that direction. It he does, it won't work, at least in the present decade. Only love with the practice of eternal punishment. Few such minds are around any longer, even in the churches, which is the burden of Mr Patten's complaint. To minds not formed by that theology, the

There are, however, conditions in which Hell could stage a comeback. It is doing so now in the former Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. In the capitalist world, if the recession deepens into a protracted depression, there could be a revival of old-time religion to the tune of "Repent! Repent!" The Enlightenment could be repealed, as a distorted branch of it has been in the former Soviet Union. If that is so, future historians will mark Mr Patten's statement on Hell but as a harbinger of how history was beginning to move in 1992. I very traditional Christian teaching on

Anne McElvoy in Belgrade asks if the West can stop Serbian nationalism running wild

s Serbia renewed its bom-bardment of Sarajeyo this week, America and Europe warned that it must stop its involvement in the Bosnian conflict by the end of the month or face exclusion from the international community. Washington is considering a full break in diplomatic relations, in which case European capitals would be likely

State television responded to the threat by calling for all Serbs to "stand up for their dignity in the face of threatened foreign aggression". The indications so far are that Slobodan Milosevic, their leader, intends to stand alone in the face of universal condemnation and take his country into the The West's response may well be too little, too late. After five years in power, a campaign of brutal repression in the Albanian province of Kosovo, war in Croatia and a systematic distortion of Serbian traditions and intellectual life, Mr Milosevic has achieved absolute power and a fearful acceptance at home which makes him difficult to budge. His tenure has seen the spread of apocalyptic thinking which has the country either emerging victorious from wars of conquest in all foes crushed, or standing defiant and unbowed against the infidels, opportunists and unprincipled cowards who make up the rest of Europe.

In the short term, the West's new tough stance may strengthen his grip on power by enabling him to claim that the West is anti-Serb. Nevertheless, the West's response is correct. The alternative is to allow an army heartened by its success in grabbing territory in Croatia to go on the rampage in newly independent Bosnia-Herzegovina.

In order to make the Western threats stick, however, they must be followed up by other measures. There can be no recognition of Serbia and Montenegro as the heirs to the old Yugoslavia, and no return to the conference table in The Hague as long as the violence

Mr Milosevic's response will be that this has nothing to do with him - that he does not command the army and that technically Serbia is not at war with anyone. The paramilitaries, he will say, are

EC in Croatia. This time, however, we should be less gullible and insist that it is within his power to stop, the bloodshed.

Nevertheless, internal as well as external pressures are building. Inflation is running at 28,000 per cent per annum. Prices rise every day, and the dinar exchange rate now changes twice a day. All foreign currency accounts have been confiscated. Taxi drivers cannot tune their meters fast enough to record the fares, and instead simply agree on an appro-priate bundle of notes at the beginning of the trip.

Mr Milsoevic is on record as saying that his people will "eat roots" rather than foreswear the cause of national unity. The day may be nearer than he thinks. If Serbia is frozen out of the international salon, it will lose its mem-Monetary Fund and can wave goodbye to any structured help in stabilising its chaotic economy.

As a result of the state of the economy, Mr Milosevic has been deserted by precisely those sup-reasoning he used to persuade the porters who were most enthusiastic during the early stages of the war in Croatia. Belgrade's shopkeepers - once solidly behind the attacks on Croatia - now see the price of war in the uselessness of the currency. The young, who marched in droves holding giant pictures of the leader's stubborn. pudgy face now ask relatives to answer the door to avoid call-up.

There is discontent, but no opposition is yet strong enough to topple a man who rules by intimidation and sheer nerve. Opponents are routinely roughed up and have their offices destroyed. An extreme nationalist MP who kicked the backsides of striking teachers outside the Beigrade parliament was greeted with smirks by the government benches. He was then allowed onto state TV to read out a list of 20 critical journalists who should, he said,

It is time the West offered more than vague encouragement to the opposition. Instead. Western nations have sapped its morale by doing business with Mr Milosevic and encouragement in ridding itself of dictatorship and in finding its way out of its expansionist war and back to the fold of modern Europe.

The federal army is a white elephant which will lumber around the region for some years to come, and it would be foolhardy to imagine that this massive relic of Titoism can be easily killed off. But it is Serbian nationalism that is propelling the army, and this — and its chief exponent. Mr Milosevic — must be tackled first. Typically, he will wait until the last possible moment to extract the maximum benefit from any situation before bowing to international pressure, a tactic he adopted masterfully in Croatia, ensuring that the army had control of a third of the republic's territory before he agreed to a UN deployment. He may well try this on again at the Conference for Security and Cooperation in Europe. calling off the soldiers in Bosnia in the nick of time. This is not without risk for him. Any backing down may induce the army - particularly the younger generals, who dislike his communist past - to turn on him. His end may yet come at the hands of the military he has exploited for

Hill and Howerd stood in a noble tradition, says Bernard Richards

deaths of two great come-dians: Frankie Howerd and Benny Hill. I shall miss them acutely. Why should this be? After all, some might say they were only entertainers, and it may seem that spreading fun around is an optional extra in a society. Nothing could be further from the truth. The contribution made by comics to a culture is of central and vital importance, and always has been. These two deceased clowns are heirs to long traditions stretching back in our particular history, and in the general history of mankind.

The earliest societies recognised the importance of clowns and jesters. They were given license to utter the unsayable, and to allow for a release of pressure when the restrictions of reverence and authority proved too much. Until the Renaissance, many a monarch employed professional fools, although sometimes when sailing too close to the wind they had to heed the whip" as King Lear puts nthound coutinues to wield the whip — nowadays by insisting that comedy be politically correct".

The antics of comedians were able to distract people from suffer-ing, and their slapstick and whimsical movements could often prove extremely beguiling. Even mortality could be kept at bay by their antics. In Love's Labour's Lost, Berowne is urged "to move wild laughter in the throat of death".

In realms where high priority was placed on control, order, and spiritual ambition, the fool's reminders of physicality and bodily functions — including sex and excretion — were salutary. Lear's Fool drags in unseemly references not just to amuse the King, but to show that spiritual and intellectual high-minedness is vulnerable and limited if it takes no account of the bodily elements which determine our makeup. His

¬ his week has seen the revelations of these dichotomies help to drive Lear mad, but that is because he is faced with contradictory knowledge too suddenly. In a more healthy situation, the gradual and persistent revela-tions offered by comedy are more benign.

Benny Hill and Frankie
Howerd fit well into this ancient and noble tradition. They were masters of sexual innuendo, and were forever stripping polite lan-guage of its perilous seriousness to reveal a disruptive and anarchic underbelly. When, in Up Pompeii, Howerd's Lurcio leeringly described himself as "serving his mis-tress", he was straining the word excessively, just as an Elizabethan comedy might have done.

Howard's suggestiveness and Hill's flagrancy were irresistible, as they compelled us to revel in the lawlessness and irrepressibility of the sexual drive. This is why exposed meanings and exposed flesh (especially female flesh in The Benny Hill Show) attracted the thing in the comic universe tightly

The austere regard of control must always be resisted, and no one should be allowed to legislate about what is politically correct either in the realms of language or in the complicated, varied and riotous realms of sexuality. Some people wanted to bowdierise these two comedians. This response was not unlike that of the Puritan city fathers of Shakespeare's time, who were always looking for excuses to close the theatres. They hated to encounter the presentation of al-ternative modes of life. Showing scantily dad young women cavort-ing with Benny Hill was not sexist; it deliberately undermined the dignity of both sexes.

But comedy is not merely a distraction and an evasion. It is a form of concentration and alertness. Its special virtue is that it forces us to attend to the very mechanism which enables tyran-ny and injustice to flourish: abuse of language. Comic wordplay subverts the complacencies and fixities of language. Often this wordplay seems to lead only to nonsense and fantasy, but even within the fantasy a new perspec-tive is offered on the realities we think so sure and fixed. Frankie Howerd was especially gifted at turning language inside out, like Feste's "cheveril glove". In an era when so much comedy is dependent on expensive props and elaborate visual equipment, it was a delight to hear what he could do with words alone. It is no accident that his reputation, like that of the equally lamented Kenneth Williams, was established on radio. Howerd recently entranced an Oxford Union audience by simply standing on the stage and talking.

(He told them he would like to be made an honorary Doctor of Psychology, because he was interested in human beings. I wonder if the university could award the honour posthumously?)

omics such as Terry Thomas, Tommy Coo-per, Frankie Howerd and Benny Hill fit into ancient traditions, which will surely survive, and there will be other practitioners to follow in their footsteps. However, that in no way diminishes the feeling of loss at their going, because while one can point to their techniques and explain, in a learned way. how they relate to the comedy of Aristophanes or Shakespeare, each had particular intonations and gestures, facial expressions and voices which were unique. They helped to give a strong sense of what it is to be English. They represent the eccentric, rebellious and critical side of the English character, the reluctance to be over-awed and bullied by systems and restrictions. They belonged to language as a plaything to manipulate and a territory where speculative freedoms can disport

They also demanded audiences and this was especially true of sponsive to nuance, suggestion and pregnant timing. Their charm was to interact with the sympathetic audience, who were flattered to think that they could be invited into their comic world and participate in it. They appealed to the fourth-former in us that refuses to die. Frankie Howerd once said he gave the phrase "Not on your nelly" to the English language. What a splendid contribution to have made. And he was right about David Frost too - his hair is "on backwards".

n my 19-year-old daugh-ter's bedroom wall there hangs a poster of Ronald Reagan. It is not there for, as you might reasonably suspect. political derision. It is there for something else.

The poster shows the expresident as pre-president, i.e. in the days when he was acting only for money, and it shows him with, if American readers will bear with me, a fag in his mouth. It is the only place for it to be, since both his hands are occupied, one holding a carton of Chesterfield cigarettes, the other signing it; for it is Christmas and the carton incorporates ren chucking snowballs at a sleigh. Above his smoking head runs a message also signed which reads: "I'm sending Chesterfields to all my friends. That's the merriest Christmas any smoker can have.' That is why it is on Victoria's wall: to remind her that smoking can seriously damage your brains. It is a memento ronni.

But it has a very different subtext for me. For me, it summons up remembrance of things past, sessions of sweet silent fagpackets which did not warn thất death accelerated with every puff. It summons it up because Chesterfields were the first eigarettes I ever smoked. I didn't bind myself to the weed of fire until I went to live in America, in 1961; and when bores enquire why I began smoking I find it quite difficult to explain that until 1961, I wasn't in a position pack which all young men then longed to do, viz jerk it upwards so that a cigarette flew out to be caught between the lips, because English packs were not built that way, they did not have a paper top you ripped off, they had a minusy little drawer you nuched onen to allow you delipushed open, to allow you delicately to prise a cigarette out between finger and thumb. It was the great divide which separated me from Humphrey Bogart, and I could not cross it until 1961. In fact, I didn't cross it effectively until 1962, because it took me a year to learn how to avoid covering the floor in Chesterfields, but persistence paid off. You can hear it when I breathe.

In short, smoking was for tough guys, then; if you saw a man with a filter-tip, you asked him who his dressmaker was, because 1961 was before you knew for certain what now keeps you in thrall to the worst uncertainty there is. And what, when it became certain, set the tobacco industry and its hapless slaves on a poignant search, not unlike the hunt for the perpetual-motion machine or the philosopher's stone which this week takes yet another great leap forward. It is the search for negative tar. When, in 1964, things became certain, Silk Cut were invented. They had less tar. I did not know how much tar Chesterfields had (if I smoke one now, it tastes like a new-laid road), but I switched brands because it to do the thing with a cigarette seemed sensible. Then, a few years later, Silk Cut introduced a new blue pack to shelve alongside the original purple one, and since these had even less tar, I switched again, because it seemed even more sensible; until the new yellow pack appeared which said Ultra on it, and if it said Ultra, it was bound to have the least tar there was, and this would be the most sensible thing I had ever done. Non-smokers will of course argue that there was an even more sensible thing to do, but that's non-smokers for you. heads in the non-clouds, no use to anyone.

changed yet again. This week, not only has the Ultra been withdrawn because it is less ultra than the Extra which replaces it, the Extra which replaces it is itself less ultra, at 5 mg, than the new Ultra, which has only img of tar. Amazed? You will be, for Silk Cut have also introduced something so much more ultra than the new Ultra that they have to call it Super, because it has only 0.1 mg of tar in it, i.e. it is not merely 50 times more sensible to smoke than the old Ultra, it is 10 times more sensible even than the new Ultra.

So the search is almost over. Soon, surely, Silk Cut will produce an Extra Ultra Super with minus 0.1 mg of tar in it; every one you smoke will seriously improve your health. And why not? As Ronnie and I used to say back in our acting days, a smoker's gotta dream, boy, it comes with the territory.

MRS THATCHER'S criticism of John Major in her Newsweek article was commissioned before the general election — and had the Tories lost she was poised to de-liver an even more vitriolic attack on her successor. The article was arranged almost month ago by Daniel Pedersen. the London bureau chief, who has interviewed Mrs Thatcher for the magazine in the past. She took no persuading, but agreed only to an article to be written after April 9.

"She replied by letter," says Pedersen. "We have a standing compartment in the magazine which provides a platform for leaders past and present. Richard Nixon, Henry Kissinger and Ronald Reagan have all contributed. I think she agreed because she realises if she speaks through Newsweek, she speaks globally."

But Newsweek denies claims by some Tories that it was bad form to deliver such an attack from overseas. Not only was it commissioned in London, but it was written by Mrs Thatcher in her Belgravia office. "It is a message not from across the Atlantic but from the depths of SW1", says Pedersen.

Newsweek refuses to reveal how heavily her words were edited but the answer seems to be very little, if at all. Wary after Vanity Fair misrepresented her comments about the value of family life, Mrs Thatcher insisted on complete textual control. Her office declined to discuss whether anyone had helped draft the article, and the group around The Spectator which has continued to champion her cause since John Major became prime minister denies any involvement. "I have had two meetings with her in the past

THE CHAPERONE

And mother came too. During the leader-ship contest in December 1990, Margaret Thatcher offered John Major to the country as her favourite ideological son. For all his yearning to be left alone, she found it hard to keep aloof from his prolonged courtship with the electorate. Now that the courtship is consummated, she wishes it to be known where the credit lies. Thatcherism had proved an -ism so robust as to defy the pundits and psephologists by returning her protégé to Downing Street against the odds. But she wants the family's honour respected, in the observance as well as in the breach. Young Major had better be careful.

Mrs Thatcher's latest effusion, in Newsweek, reads less offensively than edited extracts suggest. The gist of her argument is that the only ideology still alive and kicking in British politics is still the one that bears her name, and nobody should forget it. It is assailed not by worthy rivals but by puny lobbies and sectional interests. They can sabotage it, impede it, deride it and caricature it. They can use reactionary officials, backsliding ministers, even the reputed "wetness" of the prime minister, to subvert Thatcherism. But they cannot replace it because there is nothing with which to do so. Every critique of British politics has to define itself against the principles of market pricing, private enterprise and a declining public sector set out by Mrs Thatcher and her friends back in 1975. As for Majorism: fiddlesticks!

There is much truth in this. If only Mrs Thatcher could find a way of saying so which did not sound so peevish... The status of British elder statesman requires equal parts of dignity, good humour and a sense of timing. Mrs Thatcher shows none of them. By using foreign platforms, Mrs Thatcher evinces groans from her former colleagues. She makes it easier for them to dismiss her as a has-been, parading personal bitterness like Mikhail Gorbachev wherever fame offers a high enough fee.

A more appropriate moment for her first post-election intervention would have been after the Queen's Speech, or in a maiden speech in the House of Lords. But that is not Mrs Thatcher's style. She must be taken, as always, as she comes. On or between the lines of Mrs Thatcher's article are specific warnings: against the growth of public spending and borrowing, against excessive industrial intervention, against enlarging the public sector. This attitude was explicit in the election to Parliament of every member of the existing cabinet. If mandates mean anything, they must continue this policy.

Mr Major's vulnerability to Mrs Thatcher's continuing watchfulness is not that he has a new concept of Conservatism to supplant hers. He may have soft-peddled on some of the last government's tougher initiatives before the election, but then Mrs Thatcher would have done the same. All prime ministers tend to enter an ideology-free zone in the second half of a parliament. No, he has the opportunity to face down Mrs Thatcher's challenge by proving that the implication of her article is wrong: to show by his deeds that her legacy is safe in his hands and those of his colleagues, that his ambition is to redefine and develop the policies that emerged on the right of the British political spectrum in the 1980s and to which the left has as yet no answer. Those policies were indeed those associated with Mrs Thatcher, and no harm is done by nodding occasionally in her direction. Mr Major should be in a hurry. With each roll of the electoral dice the odds against another Tory election victory must lengthen. He has a Queen's Speech due, an economic recovery in the offing and ideologically distinct policies awaiting implementation in health, housing, transport, industry, local government and Europe. He should articulate the principles underlying these policies. He is no intellectual and shows no inclination to construct a new Conservatism to supplant that of his predecessor. He has no need to: the old one will do fine. But he must not play Bonar Law to Mrs Thatcher's Chamberlain. By words and deeds he must show that he is indeed his own man and can venture out into the turbulent politics of the 1990s without an ideological chaperone.

AGONY ON DEATH ROW

The gassing of Robert Harris in California was an obscene spectacle. He took 11 minutes to die, his convulsions watched by a panel of 50 witnesses. Before the cyanide pellets were finally dropped into acid, he was subjected to a macabre legal farce, as repeated stays of execution were upheld and then overturned. Having said goodbye to fellow inmates, he was already strapped inside the gas chamber when news of another delay came through. He was taken out, put in a waiting room, and sent back to the chamber again 50 minutes later. In any other country such an on-off-on "mockexecution", a form of psychological torture would be universally condemned as a cruel violation of human rights. His execution, ending a 25-year moratorium in California, opens the way for the judicial killing of over 300 convicts in the state, some of whom have been on Death Row for almost two decades - about the time that most murderers serve in jail in states where capital punishment has been abolished Since 1976, when the Supreme Court lifted the ban on execution as a "cruel and unusual punishment," about 170 people have been executed at a rapidly increasing rate. In the 36 states which still retain capital punishment, over 2,500 await execution.

Amid growing public despair over rising crime, judges and governors are striving to outdo each other in their enthusiasm at election time for the death penalty. But when politicians use human lives to boost their standing in the polls, the proper separation of the judiciary from the political process starts to break down. In America no less than in the Third World, human rights must stand above the baying for revenge by the mob. By any definition, gassing a man to death is cruel and unusual punishment. How can any state tolerate the gas chamber after the Nazi Holocaust? Other methods of execution are no less barbaric. The electric chair, wheeled out from museums for the electrodes to be burnished to give better contact with human flesh, belongs, like the hangman's noose, to another age. Even the lethal. injection is far from humane: the poisonous cocktail paralyses the victim quickly but he can still take an unconscionable time to die.

The United States is the only Western nation to practise capital punishment on a large scale. In doing so it comes close to violating its own human rights undertakings. In 1977 President Carter signed two international conventions, the American Convention on Human Rights and the United Nations International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. These stipulated that nobody mentally ill, or a juvenile when the crime was committed, should be executed; that there should be a right of appeal for clemency; and that nothing should be done to delay the abolition of capital punishment.

Neither convention was ratified. Neither has been complied with since. Amnesty International says that at least five people have been executed who were under 18 when they committed their offence; several have been severely retarded; and in Texas no condemned man has ever been reprieved - effectively denying any right to clemency.

The United States has long aspired to the moral highground in preaching human rights around the world. For too long its friends and admirers have muted their criticism of its own arbitrary practice of legal execution. The Harris case, with all the attendant doubts over his conviction and troubled background, is particularly disturbing. The death penalty is an uncivilised and unjustified punishment; the cat-and-mouse game played with the anguished inmates of Death Row is doubly inhumane and intolerable.

LOGIC OF GRAMMAR

Progressive child-centred teaching started with the best of motives. If children enjoyed school they would learn more. If they were not labelled failures they would work harder. By finding things out for themselves they would understand them better. Unfortunately, as in many a well meant reform, the results were often the opposite of those so earnestly intended.

The teaching of the English language is a case in point. Today the National Association for the Teaching of English starts its annual conference. Its members would do well to ask themselves why, with progressive teaching, standards of reading and writing are so low. A report leaked by educational psychologists two years ago showed that reading standards of seven-year-olds had fallen drastically over the previous five years. According to the Adult Literacy and Basic Skills Unit, one in four 16 to 20-year-olds have reading problems and more than onethird have trouble with spelling.

Children will never learn to speak and write properly if, for instance, their teachers tell them that "we was" is as "valid" as "we were". A study commissioned by the government on how English should be taught under the national curriculum summed up many teachers' views. The government refused to publish it because it disagreed with the findings. It is not hard to see why. To regard grammar in terms of mistakes, the report recommended, was "unhelpful". Rather, grammar should be seen as "a series of options".

Grammar is not a series of options. There is correct standard English and there is bad English. If children want to use slang in the street, then fine - but only if they know better. If they want to improve themselves, they need to know how to speak and write properly when the occasion requires. Immigrants well understand this. Most Asian parents would be appalled if they thought their children were not being taught good English. Foreigners are eager to learn the language, and would not be pleased to be told that "we was" and "we were" are the same.

To insist that all schoolchildren should know how to speak and write standard English is not élitist. It is the very opposite. Education is the best route out of deprivation; for many children the only one. What hope has an unemployed teenager of finding a job if he cannot fill in a form correctly or write a grammatical letter? The report suppressed by the government claimed that "he ain't done it" and "she come here yesterday" are "no more than a social irritant". Nonsensethey are a barrier to achievement.

Some educationists may regret that examiners and employers mind about grammar and spelling. They may see such concern as mere pedantry. But bad grammar is a sign of carelessness in the use of language, which denotes a lack of mental discipline in other areas. It is misguided and mischievous to abolish rigour of language in schools while it still exists in adult life Children will suffer if they are not taught rigorously. Opportunities will be denied them and they will be trapped by their own inarticulateness. Their loss will be the nation's too. As the English professor, Northrop Frye, once said: "There is only one way to degrade mankind permanently and that is to destroy language."

on Lord Lane

From Mr Ludovic Kennedy

Sir, As the judge who presided over the convictions of the Guildford Four and the Maguire Seven, resulting in years of wrongful imprisonment for all 11, Lord Donaldson is not best placed to express outrage at the recent criticisms of Lord Lane (report, April 16).
But I can tell him about those who do feel a sense of outrage. Truthful witnesses who appeared before Lord Lane in the 1987 appeal of the Birmingham Six and went away believing they had been branded as liars; the three QCs who represented the Six, Lord Gifford, Richard Ferguson and Michael Mansfield. whose well founded arguments for their innocence the court rubbished; and above all the Six themselves, who, together with the Guildford Four and the Maguire Seven, served between them a total of nearly 50 years of wrongful imprisonment, mostly because of the inability of the judges to recognise corrupt prosecution evidence.

All expressions of outrage are understandable, but some rather less than others.

Yours etc... LUDOVIC KENNEDY, Ashdown, Avebury, Marlborough, Wiltshire. April 17.

From Sir John Stephenson Sir, His foes attribute to Lord Lane personal responsibility for the mis-takes of jurors and the sins of police officers - or at least for not discovering them.

They ignore the limits placed by Parliament on the powers of his court, and the participation of other independent-minded judges in the judgments which he pronounces. They disregard the countless cases in which he and his brother judges have done justice in a manner which even the media cannot fault; and they belittle the importance of the independence of the judiciary, which urgently required defending and fortunately found in him an enthusiastic champion.

They thus vilify an outstandingly wise, kind, conscientious, acute and humane judge, not without experience of the real world in the Royal Air Force, at the Bar and on the Bench. Long after the envenomed darts hurled at him by the Levins and Kennedies are deservedly forgotten the name of Lord Chief Justice Lane will be remembered, both in and outside the profession he has adorned. with admiration and gratitude.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant, 26 Doneraile Street, SW6. April 12.

From Mr A. James French

Sir, The decision of the chairman of the Bar, Mr Gareth Williams, to make veiled references to "some in high places" who failed to support the retiring Lord Chief Justice (report, April 16) is perhaps predict-

'Nevertheless Mr Williams should have reflected upon the occasion (report, February 16, 1989) when Lord Lane laid the foundation stone for the new court house at Lincoin. Under that stone he interred a copy of Lord Mackay's green paper for reform, declaring this to be "one of the most sinister documents ever emanated from government", and a threat to the independence of both lawyers and the judiciary. A calumny set in concrete.

Yours faithfully, L JAMES FRENCH. 40 Docking Road. Ringstead, Norfolk.

From Mr John Passmore

Sir. The proposed extension of rights of audience in the High Court to solicitors is subject to exceptions for good reasons (leading article, April 15). Solicitors (and barristers) in employment cannot be expected to observe an overriding duty to the court, necessary for the proper administration of justice, whilst maintaining a close relationship with the employer/client. Objectivity towards the client's case is surely easier when the client is not in charge of the advocate's overall career.

Inadvertent elevation of the duty to the client above the duty to the court is unlikely to be so obvious and clearcut that disciplinary action by the Law Society could be effective.

Yours faithfully. JOHN PASSMORE, Whitmead Lodge, Tilford, Surrey. April 15.

From Mr John Raybould Sir, On Easter Saturday, while I was looking through the window of an estate agent in Saffron Walden, I saw an employee smiling. Is this the first sign of spring?

Yours truly. JOHN RAYBOULD. The Old Vicarage. High Street, Newport, Saffron Walden, Essex. April 18. -

Sir, In today's editorial, "One church, one faith?", you refer to the Sea of Faith Network as "a body of clergy" who have claimed certain religious freedoms. Sea of Faith is a network of individuals, non-denominational and non-credal. We include members of the clergy and laity of the Church of England and other churches, as well as people who have no formal religious affiliation whatsoever. What brings us together is our interest, as encapsulated in our 1989 statement of intent, in "exploring and promot-ing religious faith as a human

I would strongly emphasise the affirmative and creative aspect of our network. We have formed it precisely because we continue to find religious ideas meaningful and important. We are looking to find ways of building on the collective riches of traditional religious thought, and in time we very much hope this effort will include people from religious tra-ditions other than the Christian one.

Our perspective is much broader. then, than you appear to realise. We are attempting to "resurrect" a sense of urgency and immediacy about religion and its importance in human life, both as a vehicle for awe and wonder and for the celebration of key social and spiritual values.

We began, as you rightly say, in the aftermath of Don Cupitt's Sea of Faith TV series and book, and we grew out of Don Cupitt's vision of a future for religious faith as some-thing entirely human. But it cannot be emphasised too strongly that we are open to everyone interested in a human-centred attitude to religion, and we are certainly not - I speak as a lay woman whose own background is Roman Catholic -- restricted to the clergy.

Yours sincerely, AILEEN La TOURETTE (Chairman, Sea of Faith Steering Committee), 3 Leahurst Road, SE13. April 20.

Lawrence on TV From Mr H. St John B. Armitage

Sir, It is to be hoped that David Puttnam's wish to "honour the historical context" of Lawrence of Arabia's part in the 1919 Paris peace conference has been observed with greater care than Mr Clive Irving's presentation of quotation from one of their major sources, the writings of Major Sir Hubert Young ("New face for a desert legend", Life & Times, April 14).

Mr Irving sadly misinterprets Young's comments on Lawrence as examples of "animus" (whilst Lawrence was alive) and failure "to choke back his bile" (after Lawrence's death.

How does Mr Irving reconcile such alleged antipathy with Young's words "I would rather have served under him (Lawrence) than under any regular soldier I have ever met..." and "Strong, resourceful, a born leader of men, and of matchless courage, when there is no restriction placed on him he could and did make a success of everything to which he turned his hand."?

at some of its contributors. The costs of unbelief, personal and psychological, can come dear; but apparently not so — certainly not enough so yet — for members of the so-called Sea of Faith Network.

Not for them, it would seem, the pains of having to go without Communion and its companionship as a result of being unable, in all conscience, to continue to recite, for instance, the Nicene Creed. Having reduced the said creed to the status of an "epic poem" to their own satisfaction, wherein can the difficulty lie?

The difficulty, to put it most crudely, can lie in other people's contempt. The wages of unbelief are not supposed to be a continued salary from, for example, the Church of England — and a continued licence by the same token to assault the sensibilities and common sense of parishioners doomed to serve as sitting ducks until — who knows? — they have better luck next time.

Real unbelievers face up to their unbelief. They do not resort to elaborate metaphorical constructs picked out in psycho-babble to convince themselves and others that they still, really, belong, not merely to the company but indeed to the elders of the faithful. Real unbelievers would junk the salary and tied accommodation — and set about building their own church, or whatever symbolic construct was deemed most appropriate for their purposes.

So what are these dissidents? Unreal believers or unreal unbelievers? No wonder that Sea of Faith twists itself so readily into Faith at

Yours sincerely, CATHERINE JONES, 48 Lonsdale Road, Oxford. April 20.

From Mr Andrew Anderson Sir, I am not a member of the Sea of Faith Network but I have friends who are, and I have contributed to its stimulating magazine.

What puzzles me is not who is right and who is wrong but why clergymen and women are inhibited from airing views in their parishes which they are actively encouraged to discuss during their training. If their opinions are destructive, why haven't the curricula of theological colleges been changed? If they are not, why are so few senior churchmen springing to the defence of their pupils and proteges? There are quite a few bishops who were once theological college principals.

Ruth Gledhill's review (April 7) of Dr Paul Avis's book, Authority, Leadership and Conflict in the Church, quotes a reference in the Archbishop of York's foreword to "the requirement that leaders should have intellectual stature". Could one of the reasons a Decade of Evangelism is needed be that the laity old hands and newcomers alike have not been encouraged to think? The saddest casualty has been rational, calm debate.

Yours faithfully, ANDREW ANDERSON, 51 The Close, Norwich, Norfolk.

From Mr G. A. H. Watts

Sir, Your leading article today does than justice to what many Christians in this country believe. It does not matter to our faith whether the resurrection was bodily or not, since our belief is in a spiritual resurrection: the release of Christ's spirit within us, after payment for our sins.

Yours faithfully. G. A. H. WATTS, Stroat House, Stroat, Gloucestershire.

From the Reverend Francis Pole

Sir. I am so sorry that you felt it necessary to record on the front page of Holy Saturday's edition (April 18) the sensationalist views of a small minority of cross-denominational clergymen regarding the bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ. The Sea of Faith Network is surely unrepresentative of the vast majority of the clergy who, like most Christians, regard the resurrection of Jesus as the greatest of all miracles, and the one which gives them meaning to this life and a sure hope of eternal life.

Yours faithfully, FRANCIS POLE, St Stephen's Vicarage, Warwick Road, Thornton Heath, Surrey.

Science budget From Mr Alan Howarth, MP for

Stratford-on-Avon (Conservative) Sir, Professor Prichard's analogy between scouts and scientists (letter, April 16) is indeed apt. That is why the government has increased by 25 per cent since 1978-9 the resources provided to the research councils which enable them to support the ablest of our scientists in curiositydriven research, and has announced plans to increase the figure to over 30 per cent by 1994-5.

Professor Prichard overlooks that and ignores also the private sector's growing support for scientific research. Instead he charmingly suggests that the government should increase its science budget by "only three or four times".

It is odd that, as a scientist, he should suppose that money grows on

In the pairs championship, Ian Handley and Les Steele gained what could prove to be a signifi-cant success when they finished narrowly ahead of last year's winner, Brian Senior, whose partner was David Price, and 200 other pairs.

Handley, a freciance options trader, surrendered his inter-national trials status during a particularly hectic spell but is now back in contention and could successfully press his claims.

His Easter win with one of Scotland's top performers comes just two weeks after his wife, Michelle Handley, turned in the Pasadena Spring Nationals. Michelle Handley is training for this year's world Olympiad in Venice and since the couple stand level in the latest Better Bridge in Britain ratings, rivaly could provided the needed spur to both.

On Monday, Michelle Handley, in company with Sandra Landy, Lis McGowan and Sandra Penfold, improved their Olympiad prospects when they defeated Austria, led by continental Europe's leading woman player, Maria Erhard, by eight international match points over

BENNY HILL

Benny Hill, comedian, was found dead at his home in Teddington on April 20. He was 67 and had suffered a heart attack. He was born in Southampton on January 21, 1925.

BENNY Hill's humour was drawn from a number of sources, including music-hall and the silent cinema. He excelled both in mime and in dever word play. He also made great use of outrageous characterisation, employing all the worst and funniest of national traits from cross-eyed Orientals to belligerent Bavarians and could transform himself at will from a bashful choirboy into a lascivious lout. He was the first British comedian really to harness the facilities of television to advance the art of comedy beyond the music hall stage without resorting to the dependence on the strong story-lines of the modern cinema. He pioneered the visual techniques of split screens and multiple appearances, playing all four members of the Juke Box Jury panel in one innovative 1961 take-off and in another taking 50 parts in one comedy playlet.

In essence Benny Hill animated for the small screen the bawdy tradition of the seaside postcard, with its jokes about bottoms and bosoms and hen-pecked husbands leering at pretty girls displaying their suspenders and stocking-tops.

He was often criticised by the more po-faced sectors of society for vulgarity and the "sexist" nature of his sketches, falling foul of the Broadcasting Standards Council and Mrs Mary Whitehouse and her campaign to clean up television. Nor did his penchant for scantily clad girls endear him to some of the more ardent feminists. He argued cogently, however, that in his sketches it was the men who lost their dignity rather than the women. Benny Hill never swore. Nor did he chase the girls in his sketches. The girls chased him. Whatever his critics said, for much of the viewing public both at home and abroad he was, year after year, just about the funniest man on television. He eventually became something of a cult figure in America and was revered by many of his showbusiness peers as one of the all-time masters of visual comedy, alongside Chaplin and Laurel and Hardy.

Benny Hill's persona was that of plumpish man with a moon face, a mischievous grin and the bearing of an overgrown schoolboy. The dirty joke and the rude rhyme were an essential part of his act. although they were usually conveyed by innu-endo. The audience was left to pick up the double meaning while Hill protested wide-eyed innocence that anyone could misinterpret what he was saying. Hill was a master at logue, comprising a non-stop suche played the drums in a dance best comedy award in 1971, and leading his audience into naughty cession of gags speeded up by the band. While still only 16 he was a were enormously popular world-thoughts before ending with a perfectly immocent line. "Two bishops in a bed. Which one wears the nightdress?" he would ask, then add: "Mrs Bishop."

He was a talented impressionist and one of the first comedians to make a feature of sending up other television shows. He also evolved his own comic characters, among them the lisping impresario, Fred Scuttle; Mr Chow Mein, the Chinaman with an accident-prone grasp of the English language; and the black-wigged madrigal singer, Herbert Fudge. He would play as many as 30 parts in one show. Hill took great delight in word play, showing great origi-nality in his use of tongue-twisters and outrageous puns. But he believed that television humour should be primarily visual and many of his sketches were entirely without diacamera and delivered to tinkling piano accompaniment after the style of the silent film.

Hill wrote his own scripts, at first in collaboration with Dave Freeman and later alone; he composed the music for his shows: and he was virtually the director as well, spending hours on one routine to perfect its pace and timing.

Benny Hill was born Alfred Hawthorne Hill of working class parents in Southampton. His interest in showbusiness may have come from his father, a former circus performer. After attending Taunton's School — where he was taught English by Horace King, later Speaker of the House of Commons - he left early, and was a weighbridge clerk in a coal yard. served in Woolworth's and became a milk roundsman. In his spare time property boy and played small parts in a touring revue, later becoming stage manager. He got his first chance to appear on stage at the East Ham Palace. The comedian's stooge failed to appear one night and Hill went on in his place.

He developed as a performer in troop concerts during the second world war. He joined the army in 1942, serving for five years, the last of which he spent appearing in "Stars in Battle Dress". After leaving the army he went into variety, a tough but invaluable training ground. In a summer show at Margate he was straight man to Reg Varney, the cockney comedian later to star in The Rag Trade and On the Buses. In the immediate post-war years he made more than 200 broadcasts, performing on such shows as Midday Music Hall, Starlight Hour, Anything Goes and Henry Hall's Guest Night as well as at least one Royal Command performances. Early television success came when he was chosen to compere a forces show from the Nuffield Centre in the early 1950s. He was an immediate success with viewers and within two years he had been given his own series, winning his first television personality of the year award in 1954,

Benny Hill was shrewd enough to realise that television performers can easily be over-exposed and outstay their welcome and he deliberately restricted himself to a handful of shows a year. In doing so he risked the opposite danger, that the public would forget him, but this never happened.

Once he was established his style and his routines varied little but he had an unfailing grasp of popular taste and even when he had been away from the screen for a long period he was able to pick up exactly where he left off. Scantily-clad girls - known as Hill's Angels - were a fixture of the productions, usually displaying their stocking tops or their cleavage before the either mischievously lustful or mischievously innocent gaze of Hill and a cast of supporting character actors which he seldom changed. In addition to writing his own scripts he composed comic songs, several of which became hits, in particular "Ernie (the Fastest Milkman in the West)". The show's finale was almost always a speeded-up chase sequence in which Hill was pursued by a melée of women in varying states of attire, police, irate husbands and assorted animals and children, to the accompaniment of the Benny Hill theme wide, being transmitted in such unlikely places as Angola, China and Russia. During the 1970s Hill was one of the few British comedians to be successful both in America and Europe. Compilations of sketches from his television shows were screened from coast to coast in the United States and enjoyed huge ratings. Thames Television, however, was eventually cowed by the so-called anti-sexist lobby into dropping the comedian from its schedules. He was distressed by this snub. Recalling the moment, he said it happened at 10 am and he was out of the building by ten past. After more than 20 years it would have been nice, he added, to have had a "pat on the back". He was later to remark that in one "alternative comedy" act on television he had counted 91 swear words; yet he would get into trouble simply for: "looking at a girl and saying. Oh her dumplings are boiling over! ". During the follow-ing three years Hill made only one television programme - for American audiences.

Between 1968 and 1988 he made about 70 of these one-hour productions for Thames Television. The programmes were rarely out of the top ten ratings, winning the Bafta

Early in his career, in the 1950s,

he appeared in two West End re-vues, Paris By Night and Fine Fettle but he then abandoned the theatre completely. In the 1960s he was in several films, among them Those Magnificent Men in Their Flying Machines, Chitty Chitty Bang Bang and The Italian Job. Like other television comedians, though, he had less impact on the larger screen. In 1964 he made a single excursion into Shakespeare, playing Bottom in a television production of A Mid-summer Night's Dream. Unlike many fellow comedians

Benny Hill never appeared to be weighed down by the responsibility of being funny. He enjoyed his craft, was a perfectionist in its practice but avoided taking himself too seriously. He was a cultivated man with wide interests. He travelled extensively and spent much time in France, speaking French with ease, as well as some German and Spanish. He had a reputation for being unfailingly courteous and caring. He nev-er married and did his best to keep his private life private. In response to the perpetual enquiries, resulting from the fact that he was so often surrounded by pretty girls, he said he had had three serious attachments and in each his proposal of marriage had been rejected.

Despite being one of the highest paid entertainers in Britain, Hill lived simply. He had a London flat and a modest house in his home town of Southampton. He never owned a car and did his own shopping in the local supermarket. His passion was travel and wherever he went he was on the look-out for some could be worked into a gag for his next show.

JOHN TOMKINSON

John Tomkinson, CBE, secretary-general of the International Federation of Gynaecology and Obster-rics, 1976-85, died on April 11 aged 76. He was born on March 8, 1916.

JOHN Tomkinson won for himself international recognition when he became, in 1976, secretary-general of the International Federation of Gynaecology and Obstetrics (FIGO). The federation is responsible for organising the world congress in obstetrics and gynaecology every three years, each time in a different country.

Tomkinson gave lectures around the world, mainly on the subject of maternal death and was made an honorary fellow of gynaecological societies in America, Canada, Coiombia, Nigeria, South Africa, Brazil, Jordan, Korea, Italy, Spain, Poland and Romania. From 1953 to 1979, when he retired from the NHS, he was obstetrician and gynaecological surgeon at Guy's Hospital, Queen Charlotte's Maternity Hospital and the Chelsea Hospital for Women.

Tomkinson went to Rydal School and studied medicine at the University of Birmingham School of Medicine, qualifying MB ChB in 1941. From 1942 to 1946 he served as a surgeon lieuten-ant, RNVR. When the war was over he returned to Birmingham and continued his studies in surgery and obstetrics and gynaecology. During this time he came under the influence of Dame Hilda Lloyd who was subsequently president of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists. She had a reputation for surgical skill which she passed on to Tomkinson and for which he was later much sought after and admired.

In 1966 he became consultant adviser to the DHSS and was co-author of five editions of the Ministry of Health Report on Confidential Enquiries into Maternal Death in England and Wales from 1964 to 1978. Each edition contained a detailed analysis of all the maternal deaths for three years in England and Wales stating when the authors considered that avoidable factors were present due to errors on the part of the hospital, the doctor or the patient. The confidential enquiries began in 1952 and were one of the earliest examples of clinical audit on a national scale.

He served on the council of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists from 1960 to 1971, and was a co-opted member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England and deputy chairman of the Central Midwives Board. He was the only British member of the Continental Gynaecological Club of America and an enthusiastic member of the Gynaecologi-cal Club of Great Britain. In 1981 he was created CBE.

Tomkinson was a long distance runner in his youth and president of the Guy's Hospital Athletic Club. Later in life he became a keen angler, wading in the Spey in Scotland and fishing for trout on the banks of the Test in Hampshire where he had a cottage which incorporated a converted Methodist chapel.

In 1954 he married Barbara Pilkington of Eastbourne. They had two sons. Barnaby and Matthew and a daughter Claudia (now Mrs Finlay). Barnaby was killed in an accident at the age of 29. In spite of his many commitments John Tomkinson managed to find time for his family and to pursue his interest in the arts.

T. LESLIE JACKSON

T. Leslie Jackson, television producer, died on April 7 aged 81. He was born in Manchester, on April 20, 1910.

T. LESLIE Jackson masterminded the popular television shows What's My Line? and This Is Your Life. Yet the success which both, in their different ways, achieved was by no means a foregone conclusion at the outset. The sometimes genial, sometimes peppery, interrogations by such panel members as Gilbert Harding and Marghanita Laski in What's My Line? and the often emotional drama of This is Your Life called for skilful handling.
The BBC hierarchy of the 1950s was particularly hesitant about the latter, a frank import of American models which often trod the borders of tastelessness. But Jackson saw the show's potential, and his enthusiasm carried the

Under his guidance the show ran to seven highly successful series. Occasionally there were the unlooked for traumas - for example, when the night's celebrity found out that he was the "victim" and refused to cooperate, thus torpedoing that particular show. A notable such occasion was when the soccer player Danny Blanchilower took one look at Eamonn Andrews's red book and fled.

After leaving school at 14 T. (for Thomas, sometimes known as Terence) Leslie Jackson moved with his family from Manchester to Ireland, where he worked in a flour mill and boxed as an amateur before joining the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, Later he returned to Manchester to join the city's repertory com-pany where he met Joanne Spoonly, whom he married in

During the war he served in the Royal Navy as a seaman on Murmansk convoys and then, after being commissioned, he commanded a tank landing craft in the Normandy landings. Later, he almost lost his life when a storm in the Irish sea devastated a landing craft flotilla carrying war materials for the war against the Japanese, sinking nine of the 12 vessels, including Jackson's.

In 1945 Jackson joined a company of ex-servicemen actors called John Fernald's Reunion Theatre, among them Kenneth More. From there he joined the BBC as a studio manager at Alexandra Palace, where he was involved in the early Richard Dimbleby magazine programme London Town as well as in musicals, variety and, later, drama. In 1951 when the comedian Bernard Braden moved from radio to television, Jackson directed and produced At Home With The Bradens. In 1951, too, Jackson first met Earnonn Andrews. Together they devised What's My Line? of which Andrews became the regular chairman. Screened live on Sunday evenings, it was an immediate success. In 1956 Jackson launched Call My Bluff, chaired first by Robin Ray and later by Robert Robinson.

After his retirement Jackson did voluntary charity work for Moorfields Eye Hospital, trained television staff in Trinidad on behalf of the Ministry of Overseas Development, and liaised between the National Coal Board and the BBC and ITV on such productions as The Corn is Green and How Green Was My Valley.

His three children inherited his and his wife's showbusiness talents. Their only daughter. Ceri, is an actress, Paul is a producer in commercial television and Sean plays Spanish guitar but works in catering.

ARTHUR CALDER-MARSHALL

Arthur Calder-Marshall, novelist, biographer and memoirist died on April 17 aged 83. He was born at Wallington, Surrey, on August 19, 1908.

was an unusual and exemplary man and writer, whose best novels, although quite widely known and read, never re-ceived their full critical due. Of the five he wrote in the 1930s, at least three, About Levy (1933), Dead Centre (1935) and Pie in the Sky (1937), will surely be reissued and reappraised for their technical mastery and originality. At Sea (1934), a kind of morality tale of two lovers on their honeymoon drifting in a boat, is in its way just as remarkable. His books for children, especially The Fair to Middling (1959), were outstanding and much enjoyed, as were his biographies and social commentaries. But as he himself wrote: "I have never written two books on the same subject or with the same object". The course he took, as he put it, was "tortuous" and may have appeared 'contradictory to others".

In his lifetime he never found his critic; but perhaps this will now change, for there was nothing he deserved more. He wrote only one poor published book, the novel Occasion of Glory (1955), set in Mexico, a. for him, unsophisticated experimental portrayal of "an Indian who might be Jesus". But even this book provides an impressive illustration of what was most important to him.

He was unusual not only for his obstinate originality but also, and perhaps mainly, for his Christian principles. There was nothing at all "old fashioned" about the latter: on the contrary, to those who hardly knew him he could seem to be too cynical and worldly wise. But this was just his finely developed sense of reality. Beneath a usually fairly urbane surface, he was a man always shocked at the modern world and its various crass dishonesties, and he tried to distance himself from his powerful and plain emotional reactions to these.

did he let the mask slip; he never allowed it to do so again. But, failure though it is in literary terms, the novel offers an important clue to his being. In all his other books, particular his non-fiction, his sense of humour is well to the fore. He was fascinated as well as horrified by evil, and his approach to it was peculiar to him and often particularly delightful. In his fiction Arthur Calder-Marshall exposed moral enormities by a technique of objectification. In About Levy, Levy himself appears only in the responses which his trial for murder sets up in various people. Calder-Marshall's fictional masterpiece. Dead Centre, is divided into 67 first-person sections, leaving the reader to draw his or her own conclusions about the minor public school system they describe. Its counterpart was the Hogarth Press pamphlet Challenge to Schools: A Pamphlet on Public School Education (1935).

Arthur Calder-Marshall's father (also called Arthur) was a consultant engineer whose work took him frequently abroad. The family lived in a number of different places and it was not until Calder-Marshall junior was 15 that he settled down, in the market town of Steyning, Sussex. Arthur and his brother went to St Paul's School, London, living in their father's Bloomsbury flat in the week and spending the rest of their time at Steyning. Calder-Marshall relates in his often-hilarious autobiography. The Magic of My Youth (1951), how in Steyning he became friendly with "Vickybird". Victor Neuburg, the decadent poet who was supposed to have been changed into a zebra by the "Great Beast", the black magician Aleister Crowley, but who in any case certainly published Dylan Thomas's first poems in the Sunday Referee. Later, at Hertford College, Oxford, Calder-Marshall met the "Great Beast" himself, and was disgusted and disillusioned with his

ready decided on a literary life. He wrote some short stories and a novel which he immediately destroyed. After teaching at what he considered to be a very poor minor public school for a couple of years (1931-33), Calder-Mar-shall went freelance, and in 1937 even tried screenwriting for MGM in Hollywood. After a year in the army he joined the films division of the Ministry of Information - his years there he described in The Watershed (1947). After the war he remained active as a journalist and broadcaster until his 70th year, when he published The Two Duchesses. Every iob he did was well done: Selected Writings of Tobias Smollett (1950), the Bodley Head Jack London (1963-66) — he had written London's biography for children - and The Lone Wolf (1961). Notable amongst his post-war books were his biogra-phy, Havelock Ellis (1959), a wise, witty and compassionate exercise which was superseded only because much more information later became available, and Wish you Were Here (1966), about the creator of the vulgar seaside postcard, Donald McGill. Rupert Hart-Davis, called by many unhappy older authors "the last publisher who understood books", and one who, from his early days at Cape, had appreciated Calder-Marshall, had published his extraordinary No Earthly Command in 1957. He was the only writer who might have been expected to write the strange story of Admiral the Reverend Alexander Riall Woodham Woods, who during the Battle of Jutland. "received an interposed message telling him to serve God These classic books and others, deserve to enrich the lists of future publishers engaged in reissuing the best books of the past. in 1934 Çalder-Marshali married Violet Nancy Sales, by whom he had two daughters, one of whom is the actress Anna Calder-Marshall.

The difficulties that might arise were medicine to be taught in mixed classes were strongly voiced at this meeting of the general council of Edinburgh University.

THE FEMALE MEDICAL STUDENTS

The half-yearly meeting of the General Council of the University of Edinburgh was held on Tuesday, the Lord Justice-General (the Chancellor) presiding.

Professor Masson moved:-

That, as the present arrangements for the medical instruction of women in the University impose great and unnecessary inconveniences on the women who are students and also on Professors, and may, if continued, even nullify the resolution of the University admitting women to the study of medicine, the General Counall recommend to the University Court that women desiring to study medicine be admitted to the medical classes as other students are, and, on the same terms, except in cases where the Court may see special reasons why the instruction should be separate."

In supporting the motion.

Professor Masson said that at the present moment the lady students were subject to great and unnecessary inconveniences. In the first place, they were subjected to great extra expense. In one of the classes they had attended, they were admitted on payment of the ordinary fees; but in another, five ladies had to pay 501. among them - a much larger sum than had to be paid by five male students. Then, it was found that they could not receive instruction in anatomy. that arrangements could not be made for that absolutely essential instruction, including the hire of rooms, and so on, at less than 100 guineas, if even for that, among the five

1870 Another inconvenience was that under the present arrangement ladies were subjected to the disagreeable labour of the disagreeable labour of canvassing Professors in order to get instruction at all. Was that right? Was there any objection intrinsically to the proposal of mixed classes? He saw really none. Did not men and women go to church together? (Laughter.)

Professor Laycock moved as an amendment that Professor an amendment that Professor Masson's motion not be adopted. He said that Dr. Masson conceived that there would be no difficulty in women having instruction in any of the classes of medicine. and asked if they did not get instruction along with men when they went to church. But he (Dr. Laycock) would ask whether, when they went to church, they heard discussions on questions which excited the imagination they could not chasten, questions which Professors, addressing men, were obliged to treat with great periousness, and with great reticence. (Hear, hear.) It was said that male and female students sat together in Paris class-rooms, and persons who had been present reported that they had seen nothing objectionable. It occurred to him to ask, What did they expect to see? (A laugh.) The danger was not in the acts performed in the class-room, but in the thoughts that might be excited there.

Should they educate women in medical knowledge which they could prosecute when they were basely inclined? ("Oh, oh.") The ladies now attending the University had come with the purest motives; but how were they to ascertain when a Magdalene came to their classes? Should they be allowed to inquire into the characters of any women presenting themselves? One could say things to men separately, or to women separately, which one could not say to them when they were together.

On a division, Professor Lavcock's amendment was carried by 58 to 47.

BY JOHN O'LEARY EDUCATION CORRESPONDENT

BRITAIN'S biggest teaching union yesterday demanded a 20 per cent pay increase and held out the threat of strikes to back its claim.

The National Union of Teachers is aiming to raise the salaries by more than a third over three years through the abolition of a new pay review body and the restoration of negotiating rights. Teachers received a 7.5 per cent pay rise this month, but delegates to the union's annual conserence in Blackpool argued that another 35 per cent was needed to regain ground lost compared with other white-collar workers since 1974. The union wants a flat-rate increase to benefit those on the lowest grades. Senior classroom teachers would earn up to £25,000 if the claim were met in full and minimum salaries would rise to £14,000.

The pay policy, which was adopted, restated the union's opposition to performance-related pay and criticised the other five teaching unions for accepting pay review. Doug McAvoy, the general secre-tary, said that the executive would test the views of its members before deciding what form of action was appropriate Jerry Glazier, for the executive, said that the union leadership was prepared to sanction industrial action, but would have to be certain of the backing of members.

The union is also threatening local strikes against re-dundancies, but Mr McAvoy ruled out national action on the issue for legal reasons. Ballots will be held in areas where jobs are threatened. Local authority associations have forecast that more than 12,000 teaching jobs will go

In his closing address to the conference, however, Mr McAvoy said that the union would seek progress not by confrontation, but by dialogue. "When the history of education over this period is written, we will either be dismissed and condemned for offering only a King Canute-like posture, or will be recognised as using our best endeavours to shape the future of the service to save and protect the children in our care," he said.

Tories play hunt the Speaker

Senior Conservatives yester-day presented Sir Giles Shaw, MP for Pudsey and a former minister, as the only Tory candidate with any hope of preventing the Speaker-ship of the Commons passing Labour when the new House meets next Monday. With several Tory MPs already having indicated their support for the idea of Betty Boothroyd, Labour MP for West Bromwich West, becoming the first woman Speaker, soundings were being taken by influential Conservatives to see if there was a consensus for a Tory candidate who could defeat her.

Miss Boothroyd, a deputy speaker for five years, is fully prepared to put her candidature to the test on Monday in what would be the first contested vote for the Speaker since 1951.

The Tory high command at Westminster, which believes should have the right to nominate the Speaker, knows that the only way it can defeat Miss Boothroyd, who has wide backing on the Labour benches, is by quickly uniting

Other well-placed Conservatives suggested that none of them was likely to beat Miss Boothroyd. They said that the only way to keep the Speakership on the Tory side would be to press the highly popular former Cabinet minister, John Biffen, to run. Friends of Sir Giles, however, are pressing his cause as the only candidate among those known to be interested who could defeat Miss Boothroyd. Dand well-respected and. according to friends, would

Gould team seeks to heal party rifts

Continued from page 1 the Commons, is being backed by the far left Campaign Group, and will run alongside Ken Livingstone. who is standing for the lead-ership against Mr Smith and Mr Gould. There must serious doubt, however, over whether he will be able to get the backing of 55 Labour MPs needed for his nomination.

Among Labour MPs Mr
Gould is seen as having a stronger chance for the depu-ty's post than the leadership, for which Mr Smith remains the hot favourite.

Mr Gould's team said yesterday that suggestions that Mr Smith would not be able work with him were "unfortu-nate". They said that it would store up problems for the future if the electoral college did choose Mr Gould for the deputy post and hand a pro-paganda gift to the Tories. The Gould camp felt Mr Smith's supporters had been

"unnecessarily prickly" over the decision to raise taxation policy. Earlier John Prescott, another deputy leadership contender, called on candi-dates to "cool it." He was responding to Mr Smith's challenge to critics of his taxation policy to say what items of public spending they would have abandoned if Labour had been returned to power. Mr Prescott had said that although he welcomed robust debate, it should not be such that it damaged the party. Mr Grant said yesterday: The main reason I am running is to give a choice to party members on issues like anti-racism, equality, cancel-lation of Third World debt and links with the trade unions." He and Mr Livingstone are fighting on a cam-paign of opposition to pacts, withdrawal from the European exchange rate mechanism, scrapping nuclear weapons, abolition of the Lords and equality for women. "We intend to put some real fire into this campaign," Mr Grant said.

Names suffer in deadlock on Outhwaite cash names are facing new financial difficulties as a result of the continuing deadlock over the payment of the Ell6 million settlement of the Outhwaite court case.

The funds were paid to Richards Butler, the solicitor acting for the names, on the agreed date of April 8. How-ever, a last minute legal threat from Lloyd's has prevented the firm paying out to names with unpaid losses on other syndicates. Lloyd's wants the Outhwaite settlement monies to be used to pay any unpaid cash calls before being paid to the names.

The settlement between 987 names on the loss-making Outhwaite syndicate and Lloyd's underwriters was announced in February after a four-month court case. The names were suing for negligence over asbestos-related losses of more than £200 million dating back to 1982. Richards Butler has been told that it can pay out direct to names with no outstanding liabilites and whose members' agents have given the go ahead. However, up to 500 names must wait until at least early next month when Richards Butler will attempt to win a ruling in the Commercial Court that the names are entitled to the money. Lord Alexander of Tunis, one of the Outhwaite litigants, said he was waiting for payment of his £86,000 share of the settlement. Names are upset that Lloyd's encouraged a settlement of the court action and only at the last minute moved to block the settlement payments. Some are also critical of Richards Butler's role and accused the firm of having "slipped up" in not negotiating a totally binding contract.

their obligations. Most of the names worst affected by the hold up in the payment are members of the LMX spiral syndicates, and face huge cash calls.

Many of the names are expecting to lose their Lloyd's deposits this week after last week's failure of an action led by Michael Freeman, the lawyer, to win an injunction preventing Lloyd's from seizing their assets.

Members of the committee of the Gooda Walker Action Group, which represents about 3,000 names, were yesterday locked in meetings to consider further last-minute

legal action to block Lloyd's. However, Barry Marshall of Bankside members' agency, which represents some of the worst hit names, said yesterday that the firm was still considering its next course of action. The firm acts for the 400 names from the collapsed Lime Street agency, which it acquired last year. Average losses for Lime Street names exceed £500,000.

It is estimated that up to 4,000 names face ruin through their participation on the LMX spiral syndicates, which have combined losses

GPA chief could net £21 m in flotation

By MARTIN WALLER

TONY Ryan, founder and chairman of GPA, the aircraft leasing company, stands to receive a £21 million windfall under proposals put to existing shareholders to assist this summer's planned £1.7 billion stock market flotation. Among resolutions to be put to an extraordinary meeting on May 12 is one to convert the company's nine million A shares, all held by Mr Ryan, into ordina shares ahead of the float. The A shares pay a special dividend linked to profits, and GPA has decided that Mr Ryan, already one of Ireland's richest men, must be compensated for the loss of EURO Disney's share price has had as many bumps as one of its roller coasters in the past month, as financial markets take fright at the prospect that the theme park outside Paris could prove a damp squib after all.

Analysts in London believe ttendance rates have been disappointing. This disappointment has been reflected in the share price, which has fallen 21 per cent over the last month amid concerns that Europeans might turn up their noses at Europe's largest leisure project. The shares fell yesterday, closing 20p lower at £13.15. Simon Woodcock. Euro Disney analyst for Nikko Europe, the securities house, said the general feeling so far had been one of disappointment, especially about attendance figures and the length of queues. The response from Euro Disney was that "we never communicate attendance figures". As a result, financial analysts are left with only anecdotal evidence. This is not encouraging. Another disgruntled analyst told the story of a day out at Euro Disney. He arrived at the gate, after his Parisian taxi driver got lost twice on way from the airport. "I had a little rucksack, with a camera and a few lenses. The security guard asked me: "Do you mind if we search your bags?" I said: "Not at all, are you looking for bombs?" He said: "No, I am searching for sandwiches." Unaccustomed to being accused of carrying sandwiches in his rucksack and daunted by the prospect that the guards perform tens of thousands of rucksack searches every day, the man from the - upon whose recommendations millions may be invested - spent the rest of the day having a thoroughly bad time. He queued for 35 minutes for a Mexican takeaway, at which point the idea of taking one's own sandwiches suddenly made sense. He later queued for 55 minutes for one of the key roller coasters. The ride took five minutes. His tale might or might not be typical but it reflects a concern that Euro Disney Euro Disney analysts not amused might fail to meet its target of 11 million visitors a year and that potential visitors might stay away. Such talk is dismissed at

Euro Disney. A spokesman said he would rather have long queues than nobody at the turnstiles, insisting attendances were good, especially from Britain, Germany and Italy. He admitted there were not too many Parisians, but Parisians had been told by their government to wait a little to avoid traffic chaos. Still. Euro Disney has not been able to convince the markets that it has all been worthwhile. Ten days after the opening, one of the few people who can take comfort must be the French news magazine columnist who called on his fellow countrymen to burn the place down. Who knows, the free market might, after all, prove to be a more powerful weapon against the alleged intrusion of American "culture" than arson could ever be.

Banks sue Andersen over role at Magnet

By NEIL BENNETT, BANKING CORRESPONDENT

BANKERS Trust, the American bank, yesterday confirmed that it and nine other banks are suing Arthur Andersen, the accountant, for negligence over the manage-ment buyout of Magnet, the kitchen and bathroom retail-claim borders on fantasy and we shall resist it strongly," Mr Chapman said. "The villains of this piece are not the accountants but those who were falling over themselves to finance the deal."

Andersen's work had included neither audit nor due diligence. Institutions that had lost money in a high-risk venture were turning to accountants for restitution on the "deep pocket theory".

"We do not intend to retreat in the face of intimidation," Mr Chapman said. "Any losses from the buyout transaction must be borne by those responsible for them."

Part of the action will turn on Andersen's role in the buyout. Andersen yesterday said it had acted for the buyout team in the negotiations and prepared financial reports for them. Bankers Trust, however, claimed that Andersen had been retained by the banks as an investigative accountant.

Both Andersen and Bankers Trust are already defendants in an action launched by GE Capital Corporate Finance Group, another inves-tor in the Magnet buyout, which issued writs against

Eurotunnel plays down talk of cash call

By MARTIN WALLER

EUROTUNNEL has played down suggestions that it will announce a further rights issue together with 1991 results on Friday. But it is thought that shareholders will be warned that new funds could be needed eventually. A spokeswoman suggested that predictions of a cash call should not be relied upon. Instead it is likely that the 1991 figures from Sir Alastair Morton, chief executive, will be accompanied by a detailed project review and a progress report of the negotiations with the contractors.

In addition, Euronanel is thought likely to indicate that it will have to tap shareholders for more money, but that this will probably not be necessary until the tunnel has opened in late 1993. It is expected that the project's bankers will insist on some of the burden being carried by shareholders.

Eurotunnel has a two-year window between tunnel open-ing and the period of maximum indebtedness when it can go to the stock market with detailed traffic figures to ask for further cash.

The market believes that the size of any settlement with the contractors and lost revenue from the delayed opening have narrowed the margin between the eventual cost of the £8 billion-plus project and the £8.9 billion funding raised so far. Eurotunnel said in February that sufficient funds to complete

Venture Plant shares halted for takeover

SHARES in Venture Plant were suspended on the Unlisted Securities Market yesterday at 8 p ahead of a "substantial acquisition" that is hoped will transform the ailing plant hire group's fortunes. It is believed that Venture will buy a materials handling business linked to the mining industry

At its suspension price, Venture is worth £2.3 million, so any deal would effectively be a reverse takeover engineered by Richard Cameron and Brian Thompson, who moved in as joint chief executives last year. Venture floated in 1988 valued at more than E50 million, but within two years was reporting losses and cutting dividends and the shares began the slump from the high of 118p. In December, the group reported halfway losses of E5.15 million and said the support of its backers decembed an existence of the parkers decembed as the parkers and the parkers are the parkers are the parkers are the parkers and the parkers are the parkers are the parkers are the parkers and the parkers are the pa of its bankers depended on rationalisation.

Ransomes pays out

RANSOMES, the lawn mower group, will pay the next instalment on its convertible preference shares on April 30. In March, the group reported 1991 pre-tax losses of £4.5 million, compared with a £9.1 million profit the previous year. The final dividend, like the interim, was passed and it was doubtful whether dividends on convertible preference shares would be paid. The company said results and order intake so far this year gave it sufficient confidence to pay the preference dividend. The ordinary shares rose 4p to 28p.

Skandia sticks to offer

SKANDIA, the Swedish insurer, said it had no plans to raise its bid for Denmark's Hafnia despite protests from Hafnia shareholders that the bid was too low. "Skandia has put forth a realistic bid and I think it will remain," said Gosta Stenberg, a Skandia spokesman. He added Skandia executives would meet Hafnia shareholder representatives soon. Skandia has offered nine of its shares for every four Hafnia A shares or every five B shares. Some Danish institutional holders of Hafnia shares have opposed the deal.

'Slim' hope of world trade pact

BY COLIN NARBROUGH ECONOMICS CORRESPONDENT

THE European Community and America have only a "slim" chance of a political breakthrough over the stalled world trade talks when leaders meet in Washington today, according to Anibal Cavaco Silva, the Portuguese prime minister and holder of the rotating Community presidency. Senhor Silva's assessment, made public before he left Lisbon for America yesterday, was consistent with comments from both sides of the Atlantic intended to dampen hopes that the mini-summit would inct fresh impetus into the Uruguay round on liberalised world trade, possi-bly allowing an accord to be initialled by the summer.

Pressure on Brussels and Washington to make a breakthrough in the crucial area of farm subsidies has intensified over the past week not least because of widespread concern about the damage to confidence, investment and jobs that failure could wreak.

The Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development lent fresh weight to the case for an early deal in a report issued yesterday.

The paper says the partial trade reform foreseen in the draft final act of the Uruguay round would add an annual $195 billion, or half the income in China to the income in China, to world income. Over $90 billion of the extra income would accrue to the developing countries and the former Soviet bloc economies. The study says that failure to reach an agreement poses a threat not only to Trade liberalisation is expected to benefit western Europe and Japan more than other regions, the pa-per concludes. Doubts increasing over Ravenscraig rescue bid

American steel producer, yesterday started a two-day visit to the doomed steelworks at Ravenscraig, near Glasgow, as doubts mounted over whether a rescue bid would be forthcoming.

US duties could herald steel war

FROM TOM WALKER IN BRUSSELS

EUROFER, the European Steel Industry Federation, said last week's threat from Washington of anti-dumping duties on the products of specialist EC steelmakers could be the first shot in a transatlantic steel trade war. Eurofer says the American industry is preparing 70 steel trade suits against the EC. They concern flat steel products made by all the Community's big steel companies.

The complaint made by Washington last week concerns 100,000 tons of leadcoated steel bars exported to America every year by four specialist steel concerns, including Britain's United Engineering Steels. It has fuelled growing mistrust between Washington and Brussels on trade matters, against the background of the frustrated Gatt talks.

The US International Trade Commission will rule on the lead-coated steel bars in May. If it finds they have been unfairly subsidised. United Engineering's products will face 53 per cent antidumping levies and additional 10 per cent countervailing taxes. The big six American steel producers, including not a fair tribunal."

Bethlehem Steel and Inland Steel, that launched last week's complaint, were due to meet their lawyers yesterday to decide a timetable for filing the suits being considered.

The trade commission must decide whether American interests are being unfairly harmed within 45 days of a suit being filed. A decision on anti-dumping duties must be taken within 160 days.

The European Commission is confident that the Community's steelmakers have done nothing wrong, and is prepared to take the issue to a Gatt panel in Eurofer points out that the Community's steel exports to America constitute only 70 per cent of its quota under recently expired voluntary restraint agreements. The market share of EC steel products in America is down to 16 per cent. In 1982 and 1984, it was nearer 26 per cent.

A Eurofer spokesman said: "Since October 1982, was have strictly followed the quotas laid down by the voluntary restraint agreements. If the trade commission decides there's material injury, it is once British Steel decided to close it this September at a cost of 1,200 jobs, first contacted Nucor some months ago. Scottish Enterprise is having to walk a fine line between building up hopes that the plant can be saved and being too downbeat — and therefore putting off any other potential purchasers.

But it is thought that while the agency did talk to a numto Ravenscraig have taken place, or are planned.

Nucor has said it will not take on the entire operation and is in any event involved in a different form of steel-making, producing slabs from scrap using an electric furnace. That process, based on German technology import-ed into America, offers operating costs $100 a tonne lower than in traditional steelmaking methods.

But it is a low-cost, lowquality process, with a limited market. There was doubt in the City yesterday whether there was any advantage to the Americans in taking over any of the plant.
One analyst, who did not wish to be named, said the Scottish site was too far from the main markets for steel. "You wouldn't really have much of an advantage. You aren't in the centre of things by any means," he said. "I think it will prove to be a damp squib. I don't think people should really build up their hopes that this will save jobs in Ravenscraig, because I think it is inevitable that the plant will close."

The Americans are known to be keen to wrest attractive incentives from the government to move to Ravenscraig as a springboard for European expansion. The eventual resolution is therefore likely to depend on what development grants and assistance can be negotiated.

THE pharmaceuticals sector suffered a mauling in the wake of heavy selling of shares in American drugs companies over the weekend on Wall Street.

Dealers said that the markdown of pharmaceuticals shares in London accounted for about half of the market's total fall, which saw the FT-SE 100 index lose 12.8 points at 2.625.8, having been 23 points lower at the opening.

Recent disappointing figures from companies such as Merck, showing a slowing in earnings growth, have upset American investors, who are switching from the traditionally defensive pharmaceuticals area to the more cyclical industries as hopes grow for an economic recovery.

Glaxo was the heaviest traded overnight in New York of UK companies with an American depository re-ceipt facility. Glaxo ended 34p lower at 754p in London. Falls were seen in SmithKline Beecham A, 39p to 833p, before trading news tomorrow, Medeva, 25p to 254p, and Wellcome, 7p to £11.16.

The rest of the equity market took its lead from the overnight falls in New York and Tokyo with fund managers showing little willingness to chase prices higher as the last week of the three-week account began. There are profits to be taken because of the market's strong showing since the election and this, combined with the short working week and the deciresulted in prices drifting lowels were not sustained and, by the close, only 420 million shares had changed hands.

Talk of another rights issue have been rife since the courts ruled that the company must pay Transmanche Link, the consortium of contractors building the tunnel, an extra £50 million a month. But a spokesperson for the company said the estimated costs of the project, including contingencies, were well inside available funding. Midland Bank eased 2p to 360p on turnover of around 2 million shares. But hopes remain high among the speculators that a counter-bid is on the way to challenge the £3.1 billion agreed offer from the

Scottish & Newcastle, the drinks and leisure group, was a dull market, falling 8p to

RMC, the building products group, continued to benefit from last week's better than expected figures, climbing 32p to 667p. Analysts have been busily upgrading their estimate of pre-tax profits for the current year and it now looks as if the shares are enjoying a re-rating. But a shortage of stock has begun to exaggerate the price movements with turnover remaining on the low side. By the close of business only 511,000 shares had changed from Monday's close. MICHAEL CLARK Worth hanging on to Vodafone for long distance

JUST how durable are those price rises likely to prove? In the case of Vodafone, the cellular telephone group, some analysts are already arguing the case for selling into strength. Vodafone's shares surged by nearly 60p in the wake of the Tory victory and have ground to a halt just short of 360p. Before the bounce, they were trading at their lowest since the market took off in January 1991, fired by the thought that Britain's economic recovery was just around the corner. Since early in 1991, the shares have lagged behind the marperception that recession is not good for mobile telephones, which are still mainly used and paid for by the corporate sector rather than private individuals.

The latest cloud on Vodafone's horizon, as far as professional investors are concerned, is not the immediate growth in profits. which should continue for some time at above market average rates, but the longer-term perception that cellular tariffs may well come under heavy pressure as competition builds and the regulators examine mar-gins more closely.

Can Vodafone's demanding 20-plus earnings multi-ple survive such doubts? Perhaps not in the short run. But, before selling, doubters should remember what every economics textbook tells us, the cheaper prices become, the greater the long-run demand.

EIS Group EIS Group, the specialist engineer where Peter

Haslehurst is chief executive, could be in danger of crying wolf with its warning to shareholders that 1992 will be difficult. After all, last year was the twenty-first its and dividends - and was achieved when the winds of recession blew like gales across its markets.

Pre-tax profits rose from £13.5 million to £14.4 million on a turnover of £189.9 million (£177.5 million) and were struck after an undisclosed, but admittedly expensive, charge against profits concerning a cost over-run on a big contract within the aircraft and pre-cision engineering division. The total dividend rises from 11.4p to 11.7p a share, with a final of 8.525p (8.375p) a share.

Last April's rights issue at 265p a share, which raised £18.3 million, was partly used in buying three more companies, all of which should make a profit contribution this year.

Added to the cash EIS was holding previously and despite the £5 million acquisition spend, the group's kitty is still a respectable £13 million. There was a £1.74 million (£1.21 million) the 1991 results and there should be another plus when 1992's results are to Pre-tax profits of between E15.5 million and £16 million should be possible this year, to put the shares, at 394p, up 8p, on 15.1 times prospective earnings. The shares are worth holding shine breaking through the clouds of recession.

yesterday rejoined James Capel, resuming his role as the firm's chief investment strategist. Ross Goober, 46. who says he is "looking for-ward" to working with his old colleagues again, is clearly forn between the political and financial worlds. He was also once a special adviser to Nigel Lawson, when he was Chan-cellor, working for him for more than a year, from April 1986 until the June 1987 election. Several years before that, in 1979, he stood as a Conservative candidate for Leicester West. "To have two periods of working in the Treasury as political adviser 10 two chancellors is an experience given to few people, and I am delighted that both ended with the reelection of a Conservative government, he says. Ross Goobey, who says that he is. now too old to have any political aspirations of his own - the reason I decided. to go and work for Norman was because no constituency wanted to interview me as a prospective candidate" - reveals that in terms of personal friendship he is closer to Lamont than Lawson. "He is a very nice man and certainly one of the dries; members of the cabinet in political terms. It is a strange — and very unfair — politics that judges — people by their looks father than their politics." Such is Ross Grobber's dedication Ross Goobey's dedication that he accepted the Treasury job and, with it, a cut in pay of more than half." Now emember all those pre-election warnings about a looming fiscal crisis and an exploding public sector borrowing requirement? Investors in the gilt-edged market have apparently forgotten all about them, and they are probably right. Assuming a successful outcome to the £2.5 billion gilts auction announced yesterday by the Bank of England, the authorities will have covered a quarter of the entire financial year's funding requirement before the end of the first

According to Greenwell Montagu estimates published yesterday, the Bank has sold £1.8 billion of "unofficial" gilts in the days since the election, on top of the £2.4 billion worth of official taps and £600 million of calls on previous gilt issues. With another £2.5 billion from next week's auction of 25-year stock, the total funding since April 9 will amount to £7.3 billion. This compares with a 1992-3 funding requirement estimated by Greenwell at £30 billion if the Treasury is right in its PSBR forecast of £28 billion. On top of the PSBR, the £30 billion gilt funding would cover £7.2 billion worth of redemptions due in the present financial year, partly offset by sales of national savings instruments worth about £4 billion.

Of course the gilts market is not going to enjoy for long the kind of euphoric conditions that allowed the Bank to get one quarter of the year's funding out of the way in just three weeks. By yesterday afternoon, dealers were showing clear signs of listlessness and there was much talk of an inevitable technical correction. Such a correction, perhaps combined with further bad news from Germany on the money supply or the weekend's strike ballot by public sector workers, could yet create difficulties for next week's auction. In the long term, however, investors at home and abroad are going to be sorely tempted by a yield of almost 9 per cent guaranteed for 25 years by what has suddenly become the most stable government in Europe. The long end of the market is normally considered more risky and unstable than the short end, but the Bank has rightly judged that ultra-long bonds are likely to hold the greatest appeal for investors.

lympia & York, the financially stretched and secretive developer of Canary Wharf, is giving its banks a hard time. Underlying the strategy being used to get O&Y through a severe liquidity problem is a well-known inversion of roles in the property world. If you owe the bank £100 and you cannot pay, you have a problem. But if you owe the bank £1 million and you cannot pay, the bank has a problem.

O&Y's banks are between a rock and a hard place. They are unhappy about putting in fresh money without access to all the information they feel they need to make serious judgments on the group's viability, and they are at the same time fearful about the scale of the damage if they do not. In London, banks are being asked for £100 million to continue funding Canary Wharf, while in Canada, O&Y's home base, $85 million is needed for continuing support of operations there.

This approach, which leaves the Reichmann family firmly in the driving seat and relegates the bankers to an uncomfortable state of ignorance, cannot last for ever. The bankers need much more information about O&Y's current trading and the asset valuations presented in aggregate last week. Without much more hand-holding from their borrower, the banks may run out of patience before simple banking prudence requires them to refuse further invitations to lend in the dark.

mong the myriad records set last week in the stock market's exuberance over Lthe Conservative election victory, shares in Inchcape breasted 500p for the first time.

As records go, it may not figure in the Don Bradman class, but it brought particular pleasure to a boardroom concerned with how the City would react to the premature handover of control by Sir George Turnbull to Charles Mackay.

Although the succession had been clearly, and publicly, identified much earlier in 1991, Inchcape had envisaged a longer bedding-in period for Mr Mackay than Sir George's health was subsequently to allow. Almost six months after the break, it is virtually impossible to see the join.

All of which says as much about the shape and fitness of the company that Sir George handed over as it does about the qualities of its new

Nearly 300 years have passed since the clippers that were to open up Inchcape's first sea lanes set sail. Arguably, however, Sir George did as much in his six years as chief executive as was achieved in the preceding centuries. Allowing for the sub-division that split each £1 unit into four 25p shares in 1988, the share price has multiplied from a low of 73p to today's 506p. Since October 1985, this ancient trading company has embarked on a second era of expansion and growth. But do not call it a trading company, least of all, an overseas trader. This is the image Inchcape has desperately tried to throw off since the day Sir George took the helm. In the bland, business-speak beloved of modern-day industrial-ists, Inchcape prefers to mask its still colourful worldwide car distribution to timber felling activities under the term international marketing and services group.

The change of classification was one of three slightly less serious private ambitions outlined by Sir George and a couple of members of his new management team in a lighter moment after his appointment as chief executive in 1985.

Inchcape's adoption as a constituent of the newly formed business services category happened over a year ago, by which time alpha-stock status had been achieved. Membership of the FT-SE 100, which completed the triple, was celebrated last

Today, Inchcape is a £2.6 billion combine, insulated against the worst ravages of recession by an almost unequalled spread of interests around the globe. If anything, the pace of change has picked up since Mr Mackay's appointment, and it was he who launched the group's largest-ever takeover bid in December last year, just a month

The £382 million acquisition of Tozer Kemsley and Millbourn (Holdings), the Daihatsu, Ferrari, Lada and Chrysler distributor in the UK, was financed by Inchcape's first rights issue and completed this year. The size of the group grew by a third, while the motor division dou-

Inchcape could not have a better man in its hot seat for Sir George, who was forced to take a back seat at such a key time for a man whose entire business career had been so closely bound to the motor industry.

If there is an area where Mr Mackay will need time if he is to emulate Sir George, it is his knowledge of the worldwide motor industry, which will now contribute about 60 per cent of Inchcape profits. ... Importantly, however, the two key deals - the acquisition of TKM and the orderly reorganising of Inchcape's distributorship arrange-ments with Toyota — were in place before Sir George stepped down.

Given the unseemly disputes sparked by the change of policy by Japanese motor manufacturers with regard to their distribution arrangements. Inchcape's deal with Toyota, which came into effect at the beginning of last year, looks far sighted.

Under the terms of the arrangement, Toyota will execute a staged acquisition of 51 per cent of Toyota (GB), currently an Inchcape subsidiary, by January 1998. In return, the Japanese have agreed to pay £60 million, guaranteed that Toyota (GB) will keep the UK distribution rights for 18 years, and acquired a friendly, and reassuring, 4.7 per cent stake in Inchcape for about £50

This deal, concluded as work began on Toyota's new UK production facility in Derbyshire, which is expected to produce 200,000 cars for the European market by the late Nineties, is perceived as vital to Inchcape's future.

Even Sir George, however, would shrink in horror at the suggestion that Inchcape was primarily a motor distributor with a string of "other activities".

Mr Mackay, who for five years until November, ran the group's Far East operations, is, if anything, more firmly wedded to Inchcape's business streaming strategy. Since the new year, this has been underlined by the acquisition of Spinney's, the former British & Commonwealth distributor of consumer goods, foodstuffs, and household products in the Middle East for £32.1 million, while last week, the group augmented its inspection and quality assurance interests with a small French acquisition.

Incheape continues to trade in more than 60 countries, while the Analysis have also come to appreciate that with the advent of Hong Kong's return to the Chinese in 1997, Inchcape could not have a better man in its hot seat. Hong Kong has been home to Mr Mackay for the past five years, during which he has built up an intimate knowledge of the key players and policies.

not to mention the group's own activities there.

Key to the group's conviction of its ability to survive any turmoil that may accompany the departure of the British is the nature of its business. Unlike other trading hongs, such as Jardine and Hutchison, Inchcape had no fixed assets to speak of in the colony. It owned no property, nor manufacturing interests. As a service company in a worst case scenario, it had comparatively little to lose. Should it be necessary, Inchcape Pacific could be run from Taiwan, day-to-day operations. Inchcape firmly believes this will not be necessary, and that it will have an important role to play in the new era. It would claim to know China better probably than almost any other western company and was the first in recent times to set up trading posts in Vietnam and Cambodia.

Mike Murphy, respected analys at Warburg Securities, the compa-ny's house broker, remains very positive. He is looking for pre-tax profits of more than £250 million this year, to produce earnings of up to 30p a share.

This may leave the shares looking high on a short term view - a prospective earnings multiple of almost 17 - but Incheape has entered the nineties with a leap that has taken it from the 19th to the 21st

Goobey back in Square Mile

AFTER a year's leave of absence as special adviser to Norman Lamont, the Chancellor, Alastair Ross Goobey yesterday rejoined James Capel, resuming his role as the firm's chief investment strategist. Ross Goobey, 46, who says he is "looking forward to working with his old colleagues again, is clearly torn between the political and financial worlds. He was also once a special adviser to Nigel Lawson, when he was Chancellor, working for him for more than a year, from April 1986 until the June 1987 election. Several years before that, in 1979, he stood as a Conservative candidate for Leicester West. "To have two periods of working in the Treasury as political adviser to two chancellors is an experience given to few people, and I am delighted that both ended with the reelection of a Conservative government," he says. Ross Goobey, who says that he is now too old to have any political aspirations of his own - "the reason I decided to go and work for Norman was because no constituency wanted to interview me as a prospective candidate" - reveals that in terms of personal friendship he is closer to Lamont than Lawson. "He is a very nice man and certainly one of the driest members of the cabinet, in political terms. It is a strange - and very unfair - politics that judges people by their looks rather than their policies." Such is Ross Goobey's dedication that he accepted the Treasury job and, with it, a cut in pay "of more than half." Now

Hospital millions

SELF-GOVERNING hospitals that feared that a Labour government might reverse their independent status have, it seems, been rushing to sign up City fund managers after the Conservatives return to power. David Ed-

ments at broker Henderson Crosthwaite, says that since the election several large hospitals, feeling more confident about their future, have placed funds with him which "run into millions". Hospitals have always had special char-itable funds. What is less well known is that when they become self-governing under the 1990 reforms, they also became eligible to reclaim a portion of those charitable funds, hitherto managed cen-trally by district health au-thorities. Many hospitals, including the Central Middiesex, have already claimed their share, while others like Nottingham City Hospital, which stands to gain charita-ble funds in excess of £2 million from the Nottingham health authority, are still considering whether to take over the management of the funds themselves. Douglas Taylor. finance director of Nottingham City Hospital, says he has already had offers of help from Morgan Grenfell, CS Investment Management, Charterhouse and Henderson Crossthwaite, but fund managers, keen to cash in on the NHS reforms, will have to play a waiting game - Taylor

BUSINESS CITER OF Small firms' audits aid business

From the President of the Chartered Association of Certified Accountants

Sir, I believe Stella Fearnley's argument (Accountancy Times, April 9) for the aboli-tion of small company audits is short-sighted and wrong. The case for abolition appears to be that owner-man-aged corner shop businesses constituted as limited companies do not need to undergo the discipline of a formal statutory audit. The requirement for a statutory audit goes hand in hand with limit-ed liability. To advocate its abolition is an inappropriate and simplistic response to the difficulties facing small businesses and the accountancy profession.

It is undoubtedly true that many such businesses are unsuited to wear the mantle of limited liability and it may be that either an alternative form of incorporation should be introduced or the costs of disincorporation should be lessened. However, those businesses that wish to continue to have limited liability should be bound by the requirement for a statutory audit. Professionally audited accounts are used by the business community in many ways. Banks and other financial institutions rely on them when deciding upon borrowing applications, as they tell them about the health of companies. Large companies use them for assessing financial management, competence and financial stability when considering dealership appointments and supply contracts.

Tax inspectors are more likely to agree assessments when accounts have been certified by audit firms of standing. Credit rating agencies CAROL LEONARD | use them when compiling status reports. The audit is therefore an aid to small businesses and to the many communities which come into contact with them - not a bureaucratic restriction.

Those who argue for the abolition of small company audits overlook how far the term "small" is already stretched by companies legislation. The legal definition of a small company embraces a E2 million turnover limit, a E975,000 asset total and a 50 employee limit. Any redelineation of small companies for auditing purposes would be arbitrary and inconsistent with existing limits. Exemption because of corporate structure is preferable by far to exemption by virtue of size. Limited liability confers privileges on businesses which choose to trade in this way, but it does impose responsibilities. In return for the protection offered by limited liability status, it is only appropriate that companies should submit their accounts for a regular audit.

There are no doubt several ways in which the burdens on small businesses can be eased and a recent paper by the Institute of Directors outlined their own manifesto for

In the current climate, with the audit side of the profession under such focus and questions on fundamental matters being asked, I find it strange that there are people calling for less audit. The need is not to reduce the role or scope of audit but to raise it to a consistent standard.

Yours faithfully. K. R. ANDERSON President,

CHARLOTTE Beers has just finished her first week in one of the toughest jobs in American advertising — reversing the impression that Ogilvy & Mather is in decline.

As chairman and chief executive of O&M. a job that pays less than other offers she received, Ms Beers, 56, is the most powerful woman in advertising and among the best paid. Ms Beers, who tripled billings in ten years at a small Chicago agency, was wooed by both WPP and Saatchi & Saatchi before accepting what is believed to be an multimillion-dollar package from Martin Sorrell, whose WPP group owns O&M.

Ms Beers declined to dis-cuss any financial details and said she regarded it as "a true invasion of privacy" to be asked. "Here at Ogilvy, we prefer not to discuss those things," she said. "I think it puts the focus in every way on the wrong part. I did not do this for the financial package and I had, on a pure financial basis, better offers."

She replaces Graham Phillips, 53, as head of O&M. insiders say he has been forced out after a tempestuous three-year relationship with Mr Sorrell since WPP bought the agency in a 1989 hostile takeover. Mr Phillips insists it was his idea to leave at the end of this year.

Analysts say that with WPP's pre-tax profits dropping 57 per cent last year to £38.4 million and total debts at almost £600 million, Mr Sorrell is desperate for a quick-fix solution at O&M and expects Ms Beers to provide it.

She has a reputation for gaining and keeping dients. At the Chicago agency of Tatham/RSCG, part of the world's seventh-largest agen-cy, the Paris-based Euro RSCG, her key blue chip cli-ent was a $100 million a year account of Procter & Gamble, which could follow her to James Dougherty, an analyst with County Natwest in New York, says people are bound to be disappointed with Ms Beers, because the expectations that surround her are too high.

Industry executives acknowledge that Ms Beers has been highly successful as chief executive of a small, quick-response agency over a period when the advertising industry was booming.

O&M, once one of the best names on New York's Madison Avenue, has layers of bureaucracy and with no clear rebound in the economy it presents a different chailenge.

Ms Beers said: "First I must immerse myself to be able to understand the clients' business, then we need to make the agency more re-sponsive. This is an excellent opportunity, but it's hard to know whether all the outside factors influencing advertising will slow us down or speed up our momentum. We will have to have some luck with some of this timing."

THE European Commission has ordered Daimler-Benz, the German industrial giant, to repay 33.8 million marks to the German federal government. The commission's investigators found that Daimler-Benz had been sold a site at Potstamer Platz, one of the most symbolic breaching points of the Berlin Wall, in July 1990 by the Berlin local authorities for DM92.9 million. An independent survey found the site to be worth

DM179.7 million.
The commission has not ordered Daimler-Benz to pay the full difference because it found that the group had also been obliged to buy other sites alongside the Berlin Wall that reduced the overall value of the purchase. The commission's enquiry took a year.

IT 1S ironic that the Endsleigh festival, the biggest multi-sport student event in Britain, is facing a radical format change at the height of its popularity.
When the three-day event begins at Birmingham University today, it may for the last time be a tournament between teams representing the polytechnic, college and university sectors. This summer will see an upheaval in student sport. The recent legislation on higher education will enable most institutions to claim university status. For decades there has been a clamour for a unified sports body, but the price of such change might include this event. This year, the competition has attracted a high standard of entry. The universities' football squad includes Rob Matthews, of Loughborough, who scored Notts County's winning goal against Norwich City on Saturday.

Last year's programme, comprising football, basketball, netball, hockey, volley-ball, tennis and fencing, has been augmented with squash rackets and badminton. The latter promises to be of the highest standard, with the universities selecting Bruce Flockhart and Karen Ward, Scottish and Welsh internationals, respectively, and the polytechnics naming Anthony Bush, the England player.

British Open women's championship starts at Seacourt, Hayling Island, today, the world's three leading players will be sidelined by pregnancy. The favourite, Charlotte Cornwallis, aged 19, a junior hockey international, should provide a welcome new look at the top.

Penny Lumley, the world champion, plus Alex Garside and myself, the world doubles champions, are scheduled to give birth later in the summer, as is Jo Miller, another high-ranked player. With all four in or nearing their thirties. Cornwallis could be world champion within five years.

Despite her novice status in a game in which they say it takes ten vears to make a player, Cornwallis, who began playing with her father, Jeremy, at Queen's Club five years ago, has al-ready won several important titles. She took the US Open last year and beat Helen Mursell, the Australian professional, to become undis-

TODAY'S FIXTURES

WHEN the George Wimpey Australia, is training hard and deserves her fourth seeding. Her handicap is falling. However, Cornwallis's con-temporaries still lack the mixture of power, tactical skill and athleticism it takes to create a champion. Comwallis has it in abundance, although her fiery temper and tendency to lose concentra-tion at vital moments, plus a weakness for cigarettes, have held her back. She is learning to control the outbursts and is also developing an impressive commitment to the game.

Despite an energetic sched-ule at Loughborough University that includes hockey training and matches six days a week. Cornwallis often drives to Moreton Morrell in Warwickshire to train. She spends several hours a day working with Andrew Lyons, the Queen's Club assistant professional, during holidays and long weekends in London. Lyons is convinced that she can reach the top.

"She's got a lot of natural talent and works hard at bringing it out." Lyons said. Her strengths are her good, severely cut ground strokes and an excellent railroad service. She also moves well and is learning to control herself, which is the one thing that might have stopped her becoming a champion."

An emphatic British Open

victory could give her the incentive she needs to close the gap on the old guard.

by Pieter Labu-schagne. Now where have you heard that name before?
Why, Zola's coach? Meyer used to work from Zola's schedules "more or less", but the emphasis has changed. "Zola loves doing a lot of faster stuff on the track and I don't," Meyer said. And a recent move to Stellen-bosch has given her a decent track to train on. Meyer is the same age as Pieterse, 25, but was only 13 when she first ran into trouble. She ran her first half-marathon, the Foot of Africa race, and won. "But I was disqualified because I was not licensed by a club," she *s*aid. No woman has broken 8min 30sec since the last Olympics, but Meyer in-tends to change that. "I think I can run a lot faster than my 8:32 of last year," she said. Pieterse agrees: "She can run under 8:30 . . . definitely."

Meyer added: "I think eventually the marathon will be my best event." But she is pleading for time. "To go to Barcelona without experience and expect a gold medal will be unrealis-tic," she said. Too late, the damage is done.

Her physical potential is not in question. Only her mental toughness remains tres, are the distances over to be tested.

LESTER Piggott is all set to attempt to record his thirtieth British classic victory on Rodrigo De Triano in the 2,000 Guineas if, as seems likely, Willie Carson is claimed to ride either Muhtarram or Badie for Sheikh Hamdan Al-Mak-

The only proviso is that if the Maktoum runners are withdrawn at a later stage, Carson will be allowed to regain the mount on the colt, on whom he won last season's Champagne and Middle Park Stakes and on whom he recently finished fourth be-hind Lion Cavern in the Greenham Stakes at

Newbury. Now 56, Piggott has al-ready won four 2,000 Guineas, recording one victory in each of the four previous de-cades on Crepello (1957), Sir Ivor (1968), Nijinsky (1970) and Shadeed (1985). Shadeed's win for Michael

Stoute was the maestro's last classic win before his retirement later that year and, al-though he won the Breeders' Cup Turf on Royal Academy on returning to the saddle in 1990, he has yet to taste another classic success.

Although Piggott has al-ready won a Derby, an Irish Derby, a King George VI and Queen Elizabeth Diamond Stakes and two Arcs for Robent Sangster, Rodrigo De Triano's owner, the jockey has yet to capture a 2,000 Guineas for Britain's former leading owner, whose for-tunes have been back on the crest of a wave this spring.
Yesterday, Rodrigo De

Triano was the subject of heavy backing for the Guineas, his price being cut from 5-1 to 4-1 with Ladbrokes and Hills Confirming the well-being of the second fa-vourite, his trainer, Peter Chapple-Hyam, said: "He worked really well this morning, and I'm sure he's come on a lot since finishing fourth at Newbury."

African opening batsman, played himself into the record books with his obdurate two-day innings against West Indies stretching over eight hours and 41 minutes, yet he still can-not quite believe it has hap-pened. He has lived most of his 26 years in awe of Procter, McGlew and other famous South African Test cricketers of 20 years and more ago, and finds it hard to accept that he is now

They were gods," he reflected, sitting in the pavilion at Kensington Oval nursing a seriously bruised knee while his colleagues engineered a West Indies collapse in the second innings and the probability of a victory that will halt the traffic when South Africa arrive back in Johannesburg on Friday morning. And it would not have hap-pened but for Hudson's 163, including 20 fours, off 384 balls

South African to score a century on his Test debut, if we exclude Kepler Wessels, who did so while temporarily being an Australian. Hudson finds it difficult to measure either his own performance or that of the team; yet he, and they, have re-emphasised a fa-miliar quality of South Africa sport, that of being resolute competitors.
The way I felt about them (the older Test players] I could never imagine being up there with them," Hudson said. "Yet perhaps we are there with the great Springbok teams of the past. We've not been around that long and it seems too soon, almost

There was nothing unreal about his batting against some of the world's fastest bowling. On his way to his century he hit 11 fours off 223 balls.

Yet he admits he doubted beforehand if the achievements of the past few days were possible. "After being beaten so badly in it was going to be tough to lift our morale," he said. "I felt I'd been batting well personally, but getting out at crucial periods vhen trying to force it."

there were other doubts. "I wasn't sure how I would last mentally in a five-day game, but I was really looking forward to the chance of playing a patient innings, of just staying there," he said. "I was happy with my concentration, and didn't have to think about it once I got out there. It was satisfactory to get in a groove, and just play each ball on its merits." The longest that Hudson had previously batted was half an hour short of a full day, for Natal in the Currie Cup, with 184 not out against Transvaal on his home ground of Kingsmead in Durban. He was born at Eshowe in Zululand, an hour from Ulundi, where his father worked on irrigation for a British company in that beautiful pastoral countryside. When he was 18 they moved to Ballito near Durban, and last year he qualified in marketing and industrial psychology at the University of During the World Cup in Australia and New Zealand, he had felt under pressure, being the replacement opener for Jimmy Cook, yet had an average of 37 from 296 runs. Test cricket was going to be something different.

"I was very apprehensive."

Hudson said. "I'd experienced the barrage of four fast bowlers. but never for a prolonged period. and I had no idea how the shortpitched ball would play on this wicket, which I had been warned was quick and bouncy. At the beginning it's always a bit of a lottery, but once the adrenalin was going. I found I wasn't out of my depth."

nly the immature would dismiss as irrelevant Hudson's religious beliefs, and he considers these have deepened since the World Cup. He feels at peace with himself, he said, being unworried about getting out and able to go to the wicket with a clear mind. "I know that the end result will be what it's meant to be. If it's my day to get a duck, so be it, but it [my belief] has given me a positive outlook."

Having just experienced what West Indies regard as an attack with one hand tied behind their back by the new regulation one bouncer per over per batsman - Hudson tries to stand back and take an objective view.

In the past, West Indies could just bounce it all day, and that's not cricket. In this match, especially if they bounced one early in the over, you then knew the bowler would be pitching it up in the rest of the over and you could concentrate on the line. Talking to Robin Smith, he'd told me how batsmen tended to become negative and then get out, so the change is good. Certainly for butsmen."

Hudson will spend the next four or five months looking for a job in marketing at home. though he would not be immune to an offer in English county cricket. Yet, fundamentally he considers cricket is no more than a stepping stone towards his career. He has just taken one

CHELTENHAM (Leicestershire won toss): Leicestershire (2pts) beat Gloucestershire by ten wickets

TWO years of management by high-profile overseas coaches has ended for both Gloucestershire and Leicestershire. Many have not mourned their going. The truth, perhaps, is that Eddie Barlow and Bob Simpson were never fully accepted in the shires and, on yesterday's evidence, neither has left his successor a generous legacy. Gloucestershire are now coached by Andy Stovold and Leicestershire by Jack Birkenshaw. Two sounder old pros you could not wish to meet. But, while Birkenshaw will have taken encouragement from this one-sided contest, Stovold may be relieved

IN OUTLINING his expectations for this season, Daryl Foster. Kent's Australian coach, was adamant that Martin McCague simply had to take wickets in more plentiful numbers. So yesterday he did just that, finishing with five for 43 and on the win-

Somerset had needed 232 to win. Their innings was often laborious: Hayhurst spent 36 overs making 37 and although Harden atoned for this with 76 from 99 balls, his best score in this competition, the lower order had to bat in light that was never better than opaque.

FROM RICHARD STREETON IN BRIDGETOWN, BARBADOS

FURTHER dramatic twists and turns will be necessary in the remaining two days of the Test match here if West Indies are to avoid defeat against South Africa in what has already been an eventful game. Jimmy Adams, play-ing his first Test, is the last of as West Indies start today's fourth day 101 runs ahead, with only three second-in-nings wickets remaining. South Africa carefully avoided any hint of complacency on the rest day yester-day and every one of their batsmen opted for voluntary nets. Alan Jordaan, the team manager, admitted that they would not want to be faced by a target of much more than 150 on a pitch from which the ball has started to come through at different heights. They will consequently be relieved that Kepler Wessels, the captain, will be fit to bat despite dislocating a veterbra in his neck ducking a bouncer from Ambrose on Sunday. The bone was put back during a drinks break. The fact that Wessels batbelief that his players have a determination and character which more than atones for any shortcomings. Mike Procter, the eoach, took the same line, having always felt the South Africans were more suited to five-day cricket and that the 3-0 success West Indies gained in the one-day series had little relevancy for the Test match.

The Lara incident inevitably, remained a talking point, even though the West Indian did not stay long after being given not out when he dislodged a bail with his back foot as he completed a leg glance. Procter was asked if Lara should have walked. "Batting is an individual thing and a player is quite entitled not to walk," he said. Both umpires said later they were watching the ball after Lara glanced a single against Bosch and failed to see what caused the bail to fall to the ground. With the wicketkeeper standing back, and no wind blowing, it was an incident from which Lara emerged with little credit.

Lara was clearly shown to be out on television replays seen by Raman Subba Row. the match referee, and Lloyd Barker, the stand-by umpire, in the pavilion, who were powerless to intervene. Subba Row's personal view was that the International Cricket Council would have to consider whether it should allow the umpires to seek offfield guidance in similar cir-

YACHTING

FROM BARRY PICKTHALL IN SAN DIEGO

AS THE America's Cup contenders enjoyed a well carned break from racing yesterday, most were reflecting on Monday's remarkable barrle between Italy's Il Moro di Venezia and New Zealand

The one-second victory awarded to Paul Cayard's II Moro crew leaves the challengers with one victory each in their best-of-nine finals. The two yachts were never more than three lengths apart during the 20-mile course. More often, it was a matter of inches.

As the winds picked up from eight to 12 knots, the II Moro crew finally wore down its rivals on the last beat and held a three-length lead at the top mark. It was short-lived. The New Zealanders pulled back the lost ground when the Italians fluffed a gybe and the two yachts ran line-abreast for the finish. Dennis Conner is twodown in the defender trials after Bill Koch's America3 dominated racing for the second day in succession.

Conner instigated a fierce 37strong tacking duel on the second beat but failed to shake the fast improving Koch team.

For the second day running, the challengers have beaten the American defenders on elapsed time. On Sunday, when the New Zealanders were locked in a series of fierce tacking duels against Il Moro, the margin was fourand-a-half-minutes. On Monday, when the defenders locked horns, the difference widened to ten-and-a-half minutes. Are the challe gers

Not so, claims Koch. "The challengers are sailing shorter courses. They are try-ing to throw us off. We did the same thing in the earlier rounds. Believe me on this one," he said yesterday.

Hughes free to play out the season

BY OUR SPORTS STAFF

MANCHESTER United's hopes of winning the League title for the first time since 1967 improved yesterday when Mark Hughes earned a double reprieve from the ban which was expected to rule him out of their possible championship-decider. He will now be available for the home match against Tottenham Hotspur on May 2, the last day of the season.

Hughes was booked for ungentlemanly conduct at Luton Town on Saturday, and the points appeared to take him beyond the 31-point margin which normally means an automatic onematch ban - ruling him out for May 2. But he picked up only two disciplinary points for the booking, leaving him one short of the banning margin. Also, under Football Association rules, players who are booked and pass the 31point mark after the second Sunday in April receive a warning instead of a ban. With Bryan Robson, the United captain, still struggling with a calf problem -he will miss the match against West Ham United at Upton Park tonight clash and Paul Ince and Paul Parker likely to miss the rest of the season, Alex Ferguson, the manager, will need as much experience as possible.

A win tonight will take United back to the top of the table, ahead of Leeds United, and provide a much-needed boost after a shaky Easter, when they drew 1-1 at Luton Town and lost 2-1 at home to

"Although it looks as if it could go to the last game now, United and Blackpool.

I have always said we could win the title away from home," he said. "We have got to bounce back and show a bit of moral fibre."

If West Ham fail to win, it will mean a return to the second division after just one season in the first, but Howard Wilkinson, the Leeds manager, will not be at Upton Park for the match, preferring to spend the evening

Ronnie Moran, Liverpool's stand-in manager, is de-manding a much better showing from his team at Nottingham Forest tonight, Alter their 4-0 defeat at Arsenal on Monday — the club's heaviest League defeat for nine years. Portsmouth could be boosted by the return of their winger. Darren Anderton, and forward. Guy Whittingham, for their second-division match against Watford at Fratton Park. Anderton has been suffering from back trouble; Whittingham has struggled with an ankle injury. Jim Smith, the manager, is hopeful they will be fit. Victory for Portsmouth would take them into the fourth play-off place, above Black-

Spark of hope: Hughes will be available for Manchester United's match against Tottenham Hotspur at Old Trafford on May 2 that could decide the destiny of this season's League title

Taylor pays the ultimate price for ragged cueing

DENNIS Taylor, the 1985 world champion, became the fifth player from the top to to be eliminated from the first round of the Embassy world championship when he was beaten 10-6 by Mick Price, a qualifier from Nuneaton, yesterdav.

Cueing as raggedly as at any time in his 21-year professional career. Taylor's vulnerability was obvious when he began the final session 5-4 behind. A controversial "miss" incident in the tenth frame, when Len Ganley, the referee, awarded live consecutive misses against Taylor, did linle to firm up his mental

After attempting to hit the final red - out of a snooker three times by taking a twocushion route, Taylor elected the simpler, one-cushion path. On two occasions, he narrowty failed to make contact with the red. Following the fourth miss, Taylor, an outspoken critic of the rule, was heard to say to Ganley: "This is scandalous".

Taylor lost that frame on the pink and the next to a 72 break from Price before he recovered to 7-5. Price, the world No. 82, is renowned for his tenacity, though, as he showed by moving four up with five to play. Taylor, lack-ing confidence after undoubtedly his worst performance at the Crucible, could not mount a fightback.
The logistical wisdom of playing first-round matches over 19 frames, in two sessions, produced its annual criticism when Neil Foulds and Jason Ferguson, who began their final session at 10.30am, had their match suspended with Foulds lead-

After being prevented from achieving a result. Foulds and Ferguson were left with an agonising wait before resuming late last night following the conclusion of the first of two scheduled evening sessions.

Had Foulds, the world No.6, who established a 6-2 lead on Monday, not missed a straightforward pink off its spot in yesterday's opening frame, it is doubtful whether such a problem would have occurred. However, Ferguson, the world No. 108, won it on the black and levelled at 6-6 and 8-8 only for Foulds to edge one ahead with two to play while compiling a timely 76 break in the seventeenth frame. It was then that Ann Yates, the tournament director, was forced to suspend play with the match having already lasted 426 minutes.

RFU seeks lighter

workload for Best BY DAVID HANDS, RUGBY CORRESPONDENT

RUGBY Football Union (RFU) officers emphasised yesterday that the request to Dick Best, the England coach, to sever his coaching links with Harlequins is no more than a recognition of the time-consuming demands placed by the game on its leading practitioners. all countries and the solution forms part of a general over-haul that the RFU's coaching sub-committee is making of the national team management structure, from colts level upwards. While Best has objected to the necessity to terminate a 17-year association as player, captain and coach with Harlequins, he has also admitted that his role is much reduced anyway.

"The fact that Dick's club is Harlequins doesn't come into it." Danie Serfontein, chairsub-committee, said yesterday. "People do move to where the national coach is and we have got to be seen to be fair." Alan Davies, when reappointed coach to Wales, observed of Gareth Jenkins, the Llanelli coach acting as an assistant to the national squad, that "there is a commitment and Gareth will have to make cenain decisions as to whether he can carry on at club level.

Jenkins said: "I am hoping we can resolve it satisfactorily, because I feel it is unnecessary for me to have to stop coaching the club if I carry on with the Welsh nationa squad."

In England, the RFU has decided that a complete rewrite of the job specifications coaching is required.

"It will be written into the new terms of reference that the national coach cannot be a full-time club coach," Serfontein said. "I have told Dick that it's not feasible for him to do everything. His first attention must be to England, but there is nothing wrong with helping out occasionally at Harlequins . . . or any other club."

☐ Ireland, who leave for their tour of New Zealand a fortnight tomorrow, lost another player yesterday when Philip Lawlor, the back-row for-ward from Bective Rangers, who has been capped once, cried off with an ankle injury.

Waddle's absence adds to the troubles of Marseilles

CHRIS Waddle, still limping from a kick on the ankle in last Saturday's 3-0 league win over Monaco, will miss Olympique Marseilles's French Cup quarter-final against Caen tonight

Franck Sauzee will be the replacement for the English forward, who, according to yesterday's edition of the weekly magazine, Franceextra nine million francs (approximately £900,000) in agent's fees when he signed from Tottenham Hotspur three years ago. The maga-zine published details from the 1990 accounts after the Marseilles vice-president, Jean-Louis Levreau, had denied the club had ever used an agent to sign players.

The accounts show Marseille paid out 17 million francs to third parties when they signed Waddle, the Brazilian defender, Carlos Mozer, from Benifca and Manuel Amoros, from Monaco, in the last five years. Marseilles is one of nine clubs being investigated for possible financial irregularities. Cannes, another of the nine, has just been handed a tax bill for five million francs.

after discovering irregular-ities in two transfer deals. Monaco, at least, received somthing to cheer them when the French League agreed to advance the final programme of the season, from May 2 to May 1 so as to give them more preparation for the Eu-final against Werder Bremen in Lisbon on May 6. Beigium and stage Europe's first matches in the long, arduous quest to qualify for the 1994 World Cup finals in the United States. Both are at home to

underdogs, Cyprus and Alba-nia respectively. Although Spain beat Albania 9-0 in December 1990, the national coach, Vicente Miera, is not taking victory for granted but he is, at least, encouraged by the goal-scoring form of Barcelona and Real Madrid, each of whom hit seven goals in their respective league matches last weekend. The coach has called up six players from Barcelona and four from Real, the league leaders, who, incidentally, may have seen the last of Hugo Sánchez.

The Mexican forward has received a 70-day suspension

without pay following his lat-est dispute with Leo Beenhakker. The ban ends on June 30, the day that Sanchez's contract expires.

The player also received a one million-peseta (approximately £6,000) fine. Sánchez's row with the club's Dutch coach came to a head when the Mexican refused to travel as a substitute for last k's Uefa Cup sem against Torino.

He has played only sporadically this season since returning from a near year-long knee injury on January 8. He has scored more than 280 goals since arriving in Spain li years ago.

Borg warned that his credit may be spent

FROM ANDREW LONGMORE, TENNIS CORRESPONDENT IN MONTE CARLO

EVEN in one of the gambling capitals of the world, no credit is everlasting, and after his latest defeat, Bjorn Borg's account in Monte Carlo is on the verge of being closed for good. Yesterday, as Pete Sampras and three other seeds joined Borg on the sidelines, the tournament director of the Monte Carlo Open, Bernard Noat, hinted strongly that, after two abortive comeback attempts, the Swede would not have access to a free place in the tournament next year. "Borg had been responsible for the success of the Monte Carlo Open in the early days," Noat said. "But it would be better for him to be like Ilie Nastase and enjoy himself on the terraces. If he wanted to come back again next year, I could not agree to give him a wild card as easily as I did this year. He would have to give a good reason for getting one. "This year, he was more serious. He had a modern racket and had practised hard. But the result was not much better. I think he would be better in veterans' tennis." That was the gist of much of the advice that greeted

if he does not choose to take it.

to shut unceremoniously in his face. That is, if they are not already jammed by the crowds flocking to the exit as they did long before the end of his defeat by Wayne Ferreira in the first round. Nothing, though, seems to shake Borg's belief that all he needs is time, and he has one more chance to prove everyone wrong, next week in Munich. Sampras, the No. 2 seed, and Richard Krajicek will echo Borg's sentiments after failing to adapt their bigserving games to the foreign and more delicate requirements of clay. On faster surfaces, both can use their services to get out of trouble. On clay, that is not so easy, and, having dug themselves into a hole, neither was able to find the ladder. Sampras lost the first five games to Carl-Uwe Steeb in 15 minutes and, though he recovered a little thereafter, one break in the second set was enough to give the German a 6-3, 6-4 victory. Krajicek, who has risen into the top 20 after his semi-final at the Australian Open and a final in Tokyo, looked thoroughly ill at ease in losing to Marc Rosset: ironically, the one man on the tour who can he might find doors starting outserve the big Dutchman.

England suffer as Taylor gives priority to clubs

By Stuart Jones, football correspondent

GRAHAM Taylor, in agreeing to put the clubs before the country, has reluctantly forsaken the last of his intended experiments before the European football championship finals. His line-up against the Commonwealth of Indepen-dent States in Moscow next Wednesday promises to re-semble virtually an England

Unwilling to disturb the delicate balance of teams chasing the League champ-ionship and places in next season's Uefa Cup, he has provisionally omitted 21 players from the top five clubs -Leeds United, Manchester United, Sheffield Wednesday, Arsenal and Liverpool. All of them may remain unavailable. Taylor fears being left with the remnants of an already heavily depleted squad of 24 and a handful of substitutes. Although the senior and B internationals would both be rendered almost wholly meaningless, he neither has nor will consider abandoning the three-day trip. "That would not be acceptable." he said yesterday. "The worst thing would be to pull out because we can't raise a team. "Besides, it is not a bad

Newcastle lodge official protest

NEWCASTLE United are to make an official complaint about the handling of their match by the referee, Brian Coddington, at Derby Coun-ty on Monday. United had three men sent off as they lost 4-1, their fifth successive defeat, which puts the club in third division next season.

The Newcastle manager. Kevin Keegan, said: "I have got to make sure that we send in an official complaint. It won't get the match replayed or get that referee off the League list, but it will make me feel a lot better.

"My biggest criticism is that he did not take into account the circumstances of the game. There was a bomb scare before the match, a 21,000-plus crowd, and

Sunderland have withdrawn Anton Rogan from Northern Ireland's opening World Cup qualifier against Lithuania in Belfast next Tuesday. The FA Cup finalists have matches 24 hours either side of the Irish game. The Everton full back, Andy Hinchcliffe, may need further surgery on his troublesome knee.

The English referee, Joe Worral, will be in charge of the first leg of the Uefa Cup final between Torino and Ajax on April 29. Aron Schmidhuber, of Germany, will referee the European Cup final at Wembley on May 20 between Barcelona and Sampdoria.

DeFreitas hits lethal length to crush Essex

By JACK BAILEY

CHELMSFORD (Lancashire won toss): Lancashire (2pts) beat Essex by eight wickets

PHILIP DeFreitas destroyed Essex. They never recovered from the shock of losing Graham Gooch to the fourth ball of the day and Mark Waugh to the sixth, both victims of late movement off the seam from balls of full length from Maintaining a full length was the key; and the England bowler's natural ability to deviate the ball at lively pace was the chief cause of the inability by Essex to escape the revolving door which spilled them out at the pavilion door inside two hours for 61 runs. It was their lowest total in any one-day game.

Buoyed, and swept along by the success of that fateful eginning, DeFreitas bowled beautifully in an unbroken spell of eight overs — in which he took five of the first six vickets to fall at a cost of 16 runs. This, his best performance in the Benson and Hedges Cup, was helped by a good supporting cast, in which the bowling of Watkinson and Morrison featured. and some excellent catching. Essex were already scheduled by Gooch for an hour-long session in the nets at close of play. "Naturally, I am not happy with our performance but I am not going to make a drama out of it." he said. "Daffy's figures speak for themselves. He bowled exceptionally well and got the ball to seam about a bit. Now it is down and work at our game." He is right, of course, and dominant innings was played in the losing cause by lan Botham, who won the gold award.

Cowdrey brings Durham down to earth

DURHAM (Glamorgan won toss): Glamorgan (2pts) beat Durham by four wickets

Losing causes do not appeal to Botham, but on a day when all the other Test-class batsmen failed, it was a measure of Botham's innings that he reminded us how good a cricketer lurks behind the gargantuan personality. Coming in to replace Jones. who was trapped by one that nipped back as Durham subsided to 18 for three, he began cautiously, taking four overs to get off the mark, and

When he did step up a gear, as Croft and Dale appeared, it was still a smooth, controlled acceleration, with watchfulness the key, as he drove with the full flow of a straight bat and pounced mercilessly on anything short to cut or pull powerfully. He hit nine fours and one six in an innings lasting 115 balls. Only at the death, when the state of the game justified it, did he start to swing the bat regardless, and paid the price, skying a shot aimed at the prison to mid-on. Botham was 14 short of a maiden century for his new county.

With his fourth ball, Maynard was leg-before. A roar of triumph from 3,000 voices rent the air. In his next over the roar reached the cathedral as Richards was betrayed by one that stopped, Botham racing forward to dive and take a one-handed catch inches above the

Gallacher backs Valderrama for Ryder Cup

BY MITCHELL PLATTS GOLF CORRESPONDENT

THE 1997 Ryder Cup will probably be played at Valderiama, which likes to think of itself as the Augusta of Europe, on the Costa del Sol on Spain. Bernard Gallacher, the Europe captain, expressed his support for Valderrama when the club launched its bid in London yesterday to host Europe's biennial match

"And when they are evenly balanced, members of the jury," he would say, "you must add to the side of the accused that precious weight, the presumption of innocence." No doubt it worked extremely well, although one churlish judge started his summing up by telling the jury it was always a relief to him when Sir Edward started his scales of justice act because it meant he was coming to an end.

I never saw Marshall Hall, but my father told me he was preceded into court by a clerk bearing a pile of clean handkerchiefs, a carafe of water and an aircushion. When the prosecution evidence became awkward, he would blow his nose, a sad trumpet, on one of the handkerchiefs. If it became worse he would knock over a glass of water. If it became really damning he would slowly inflate the air cushion and then the jury had eyes and ears for nothing else.

When I was developing my own performance I tried walking up and down in a manner I copied from the late Lord Justice Salmon until the judge said: "Do keep still. It's rather like watching pingpong." When I tried to deflate an endless prosecution by congratulating the jury on having sat through what was undoubtedly the most boring case ever to be heard at the Central Criminal Court, the judge said: "Members of the jury, it may come as something of a surprise to you to know that the sole purpose of the criminal law of England is not to entertain Mr Mortimer." Juries are often friends to advocates.

judges rarely. The careers of such stars as Marshall Hall show that advocacy may certainly provide great entertainment. It may also be a form of art. A more important question is whether its expert use is an aid or an impediment to the administration of justice. David Pannick, QC, a Fellow of All Souls and a practising barrister, has written a book in which this question is put with great clarity, true understanding and a wealth of excellent anecdotes. I am delighted to report that he comes down on the side of Marshall Hall's descendants, although the standard of

Mr Pannick rightly finds the cornerstone of our system to be the "cab rank" principle. The advocate must never pronounce judgment. It is not for him to condemn, still less, to reject a client. It is vital to the administration of justice that anyone on trial, however horrific the alleged crime or repellent the suspect, has his case put as well as possible and as persuasively as he would himself if he possessed the skills of advocacy.

Certain radical barristers have suggested they would not defend suspected rapists or landlords or persons accused under the race relations acts. Mr Pannick is right to condemn this tendency. As advocates we sit like taxis on the rank, our flags up and our engines purring, prepared to take on anyone who could squeeze a fare out of the legal aid, or, more often than is realised, for a free ride.

Mr Pannick, following this great tradition, has taken on such unlikely passengers as the government in the Spycatcher case, Cap'n Bob. Tiny Rowland, the former Chief Rabbi, L. Ron Hubbard and a waitress dismissed because her bust was too large. I have opened the cab door to crypto-fascists, doubtful property dealers and police officers alleged to be bent.

Only once did I refuse a fare. I had a client in a divorce case whose wife had alleged that he indulged in curious sexual practises. He had an undisclosed source of income and, after prolonged questioning. he admitted to being a part-time assistant hangman. I put down my flag and drove off rapidly in the opposite direction. It was more than 25 years ago and I never did it again. An advocate is like a doctor. He should aim to get his patient, or client, out of trouble and not pass moral judgments.

This brings us to the question everyone asks about advocates and, not being entirely satisfied with the answer, remains convinced that barristers are hypocrites, or even outright liars, and no more to be trusted than politicians, secondhand car salesmen or persons in advertising: "How on earth can you defend people you know to be

The question is so simple and the answer so complicated. "I don't know them to be guilty. It is not my job to decide if they are guilty or not. There is a judge to do that. Or a jury. There is a prosecutor to make the case look as bad as possible, no doubt with a little help from his Lordship, who sometimes likes to put the boot in. My job is to argue the case as well as I can and to suspend my disbelief. In fact, my disbelief has been left hanging in a corner cupboard in my chambers for the past 30 years. Of course you can have some doubts about your own client's story, and then you see all its weaknesses and probably do it rather well. The hardest case to do well is one in which you believe passionately in the justice of your cause. You may ignore the points against you and probably lose." The chapter in David Pannick's book explaining the mental process which comes so naturally to the advocate, and seems so morally dubious to the outside world, is the best and clearest exposition of the advocate's morality I have come across. It is given great weight by a quotation I had not remembered. Boswell asked his friend if it were right for a barrister to support a case he felt to be bad. "Sir," the great doctor told him. "you don't know it to be bad till the judge determines it. An argument which does not convince yourself may convince the judge to whom you urge it, and if it does convince him, why then, sir, you are wrong and he is right. It is his business to judge, and you are not to be confident in your own opinion but to say all you can as to your client, and then hear the judge's opinion." With which pronouncement the defence for the advocate's suspension of disbelief

Another reason the advocate should not decide his client's guilt or innocence is our system, which I believe we can still claim to be the best yet devised. A trial under our law is an argument which sets out to decide whether the prosecution has made the jury sure of guilt; and the fact that it has failed to do so does not mean the defender's client is innocent. The great virtue of this form of trial is that it enshrines the presumption of innocence, and it depends on the ability of advocates on both sides to present the issues clearly and with force.

It does not matter much if the advocates are barristers or solicitors, provided they spend their days in law courts and practise advocacy until it becomes a natural instinct. Indeed the bar argued for its monopoly in such an inept way leven calling in a firm of advertising agents to plead its cause) that the change was bound to happen. With unaccountable foolishness the committee recommending it suggests freeing solicitors from the "cab rank" principle. So one of the basic strengths of our system may be lost through sheer carelessness. As so often, a reasonable reform may become an act of wanton destruction.

The advocate's life is a strange one. You are never quite yourself: at worst a mouthpiece, at best an interpreter for a fellow human being who is often unlikeable and always in trouble. You must bow to judges, szy, "If your Lordship eases", and laugh at their jokes. You must often simulate rage but never lose your temper. The task requires great persistence and the courage to stand up to hostile and

You often feel sick with anxiety before you go into court, and when you are on your feet you know one misguided question may let in a flood of evidence which may remove your client from his family and friends or ruin his reputation. You can never afford to be unprepared or ill in the middle of a case. You must make instant decisions and never show uncertainty.

If you write a bad play or paint an appalling picture nobody goes to prison for 14 years. Failures in the art of advocacy have more serious consequences and perhaps the only way to keep entirely same is to forget every case once it is over. There are weeks when you must know every address, every name, every date in some complicated history. Two days after the verdict they are washed out of your mind. There is only one truly happy moment, an enormous feeling of relief which all advocates recognise and it comes when you reach the end of a final speech and sit back, sweating and trembling slightly with absolutely nothing left to say. Then your job is over. The hard business of judgment is up to 12 strangers, and a great weight is lifted from your shoulders. Such feelings must have been unendurable in death penalty cases, and the old criminal silks lived on their nerves; some of them relaxed in nightchubs and married a succession of chorus girls. Others, isolated in the strangely unreal world of law courts, betrayed their innocence in curious pronounce-ments. Mervyn Griffith Jones asked if the jury would like their wives or their servants to read Lady Chatterley's Lover, and the prosecuting counsel in the Rattenbury case asked a doctor if regular sexual intercourse might not seriously undermine the health of an 18year-old boy. I once heard it suggested to a jury in an obscenity case that "we have done without oral sex for the last 2,000 years so why should we need it now?". It is right for the advocate to be detached, but daily contact with mayhem seems to have left some of them curiously uninformed about life outside the robing room.

Sometimes the strain simply becomes too great. I heard of a barrister who returned to court after lunch and stood up to make his final plea for the defence. "Members of the jury," he said, "this is the point at which I should make a moving and impassioned speech on behalf of my client, the learned judge will then give an unbiased summing up, and you will then retire and come to a just verdict. But as I feel far too exhausted to make an impassioned speech, and as the learned judge has never given an unbiased summing up in his entire career, and as you look far too stupid to come to a just verdict, I shall sit down." He had expressed himself with unusual honesty and I believe a retrial had to be ordered Everyone setting out to become an advocate should read David Pannick's book and it should be enjoyed by everyone concerned about our trial system and anxious to discover its virtues. As Mr Pannick makes clear, it cannot function without advocates. And yet they live curious lives, and the best of them have seldom been entirely happy. For all their elo-quence and occasional flamboyance, there is always a space inside them, waiting to be filled by a

TOMORROW Private Life: John Diamond

Just a phrase I'm going through It's the tell-tale references to sume he was asking for a punch in ometimes, in the middle of the night, I wake up in my the night, I wake up ut my little flat, turn on the light, and burst into tears with relief. "Oh kitties," I gasp. "What a terrible dream! I dreamed I was in the Algarve on holiday on my own again!" The awoken cats (God bless them) at first assume an air of polite concern. But at the word "Algarve". they exchange weary glances (the feline equivalent of Tsk") and settle their heads back down on their paws. My buried-alive-in-Portugal saga seems to have lost its news value.

Meanwhile, I whitter on, "I am in this cafe, you see, and i am reading the phrase-book. And all I can say in Portuguese is that I want two coffees, and four teas with milk, and lots of cakes! But I don't really want all these drinks because I'm on my own! And they keep bringing cakes and teas and coffees, and ! don't know how to say Stop! and the teas keep coming and it's like the Sorcerer's Apprentice and I look around and see that nobody is listening. The good thing about this Algarve nightmare is that at least it covers everything you might want to have a nightmare about - from waking up in a box, to doing Finals in Sanskrit, to being drowned in a flash flood of Twinings. It's all there. A friend of mine, who irequently suffers from the the Finals dream, says he sometimes manages to double the anxiety by imagining that if he doesn't pass this impossible exam, he won't be allowed to reach the age of 35; he will be obliged to go back to 11 and start again. Yike. In a similar exercise. I sometimes ring the changes on my Algarve nightmare by imagining that while I order the usual never-ending buckets of tea and coffee, I am unaware the laws of the country have been changed. so I am slung into jail for some sort of beverage transgression.

Why am I going on about it? Because I have been studying a little phrase-book I picked up in Italy on my last holiday, and have been rather alarmed by it. L'Inglese come si parla has always worried me, I admit, ever since I first discovered I had goofed in the shop and bought the wrong sort of phrase-book - intended for Italian visitors to England, rather than the other way around. "What would you charge to drive me to Richmond?" was the first phrase I saw in it, helpfully spelled out in pretend-phonetics: Huot und in ciaadg tu draiv mi tu Rite mond? And I thought, hang on, this can't

But what I didn't fully appreciate at the time was what a nightmare experience the Italian visitor would have if he allowed this little phrasebook to govern his expectations of England. Because close attention reveals this newly-printed publication to have been written either: a) by someone trying to push back the boundaries of existential terror; b) by someone who got all his information from watching Ealing films; or c) in 1948.

trams that first set you thinking. Then you notice that the pubs close at 10 o'clock, the planes stop at Renfrew, and there are jam omelettes on the bill of fare. The world is suddenly all Sidney Tafler and black and white. In a tobacconist's shop, the choice of cigarettes is Gold Flake, Players and Capstan; and the lonely Italian visitor in search of a girlfriend proceeds at once to a dance hall. "Dhis tiun is veri na(i)s, isnt it?" he says to his partner, peering over her shoulder at the phrase book, and speaking like a computer. He riffles a few pages. "Iu aa(r) e wanderful daanser! Mei ai sii iu ho(u)um? Huot is iu(r) adres?" Encouraged to dabble in less formal English, he tells his new lady-friend she is "(e) na(i)s litl bit ov guuz" (a nice little bit of goods). Something about all this makes me intensely worried on his behalf.

"Poorter! Tefijk dhis laghldg tu dhe Braiten trein!" ("Porter, take this luggage to the Brighton train"). There would be some sort of riot. Alas, the British public would never guess he was living in some parallel phrase-book universe. would they? They would just as-was published in a spirit of mischief by someone obsessed with Ealing Films, because actually the story that emerges from its pages is rather like an Ealing plot. Poor guileless foreigner (played by Alec Guinness, perhaps) works hard to overcome loneliness by using authentic popular slang such as "nose-rag", "old horse" and "cheese it!" and nobody knows what the hell he is talking about. "Dhets ool mai ai end Beti Maarten!" he exclaims jocularly "That's all my eye and Betty Martin"), amid general shrugs. To make matters worse, the phrase "To pull the plonker" is mysteriously omitted from L'Inglese come si parla. So the poor bloke keeps hitting the deck without ever understanding the insis-tent question on all English people's lips.

THE Courtyard, a flexible black box of a studio theatre like the National Theatre's Cottesloe, opened a couple of years ago with a superb production of a play by a dissident Czech. Eastern Europe is evidently a speciality; now we have tragicomic slices of domesticity seen through female eyes by Ludmila Petrushevskaya, acclaimed in her native Russia as a "feminist Chekhov". Her Cinzano has been performed by visiting Russians in Britain: a wry. resigned look at the alcoholic limbo inhabited by many Russian men. The present play includes male characters. most of them stinkers, from the bullying or sickly children who dominate their mothers to layabout husbands or effusively gushing seducers who turn venomous. The author's fairness allows us to glimpse what passes for their charm; and also to see the squabbles, selfishness and petty resentments in the women's Divorced Ira is less Chekhovian than positively quixotic she is a teacher of Gaelic, Welsh and Cornish, the demand for which can hardly have increased even since perestroika. She has rented a summer dacha, reluctantly shared with family connections. They quarrel over the rent, the leaking roof, their fighting kids. Harassed by her wailingly self-pitying mother (Ann Penfold in a rhapsodically reproachful Geordie ostinato, laughter seamlessly turning to sobs), worried by her sick son, Ira has a fling with a wealthy Mr

The temperamental vacillations of the Russian soul come over as mere inconsistencies in English perfor-mance, especially in Jackie Lye's un-derplayed Ira, which unfairly makes Richard Albrecht's expansive adulterer look overdone. Stephen Mulrine's translation has the usual quota of insidious, unnoticed Americanisms, but provides fine parts for Lorraine Ashbourne, a miniskirted comic actress combining proletarian perkiness with glints of refinement on the Julie Waiters model; for Paul Viragh as her hopeless soak of a toy boy husband "allergic to manual work"; for Helen Ryan as a dotty caretaker with the look of a baglady; and, most of all, for Kay Mellor, herself an established playwright. As a harassed nurse, aggressively loyal mother and generally overburdened woman, her hatchetfaced bitterness marvellously expresses nerves screwed up to screaming pitch. Designer Pamela Howard transforms the rectangular acting space into a summer home and a no less chittered city flat. Michael Birch's production fails to eliminate longueurs; but this is a worthy, if only sporadically convincing, piece of the new Russia's theatrical

Freddie Mercury Tribute Wembley Stadium

As always in these situations, the video inserts which popped up on the giant screens to either side of the stage during the changeover time between groups failed to hold the attention. Nor did the vaunted satellite link-ups with U2 in Sacramento, California (a recording, surely) and Mango Groove in Johannesburg fare any better. Elizabeth Taylor's homily on Mercu-ry's death and on how to avoid a similar fate got a listless reception. It was virtually the only overt reference to the subject, although George Michael later made some hard-hitting and salient points, and an emotional David Bowie recited the Lord's Prayer on behalf of a friend dying from Aids.

The second half of the concert featured the surviving members of Queen - Roger Taylor (drums/vocals). John Deacon (bass) and Brian May (guitar/vocals) - who performed a set mostly of Queen songs with a succession of star singers attempting to fill the departed Mercury's boots, includ-ing Roger Daltrey ("I Want It All"). Paul Young ("Radio GaGa"). Seal ("Who Wants To Live Forever") and Lisa Stansfield ("I want To Break Robert Plant came closest to replicating Mercury's peculiar brand of coquettish narcissism, but his perfor-mances of "Innuendo" and "Crazy Little Thing Called Love" were marred by an erratic microphone sound. Likewise Bowie's and Annie Lennox's intimate duet of "Under Pressure" was spoilt by an indistinct vocal mix.

came when Bowie. Ian Hunter and Mick Ronson (guitarist from Bowie's Spiders From Mars band) played the old Mott The Hoople hit "All The Young Dudes". Hunter performed with croaky passion, while the rail-thin Ronson, himself seriously ill with cancer, cut a tragi-heroic figure.

Bohemian Rhapsody" fell to Elton John. Sporting a conspicuously luxuriant new growth of hair he wobbled uncertainly between octaves before passing the baton to Axl Rose, who leapt out from the wings like an irrepressible genie-demon to deliver the song's quasi-metal finale. But it was Liza Minnelli, of all

But it was Liza Minnelli, of all people, whose show-closing rendition of "We Are The Champions" most convincingly captured the essence of Mercury's unique and much-loved style. Combining a commanding presence with a suitably valedictory tone, she injected just the right degree of knowing burlesque into her performance. It was a touching and appropriate end to a heartfelt memorial.

An entire industry caters for the American desire for eternal life. Apart from the founders of the Alcor Life Extension Foundation, the body freezers - death is "very undesirable", one of them hazarded - there are the plastic surgeons who turn back the years with tucks and suction. Dr Michael Sachs, resplendent in a bril-liant blue suit in his Central Park South consulting rooms, was gratifyingly matter of fact. He himself would never have plastic surgery, he admitted, as he prepared to rejuvenate

Debbie, a 40-something housewife from New Jersey whose husband had deserted her for a younger model. Debbie had been coaxed into the surgery by her daughter Cheryl, who declared that her mother was going to emerge as "a complete package", able to compete once more on the singles dating scene. Dr Sachs did a magnificent job: her face was stretched tight and smooth over the bones, her teeth flashed, her bagless eyes gleamed hungrily. She looked wonderful, if you like that kind of thing. . Dr Sachs may be a great surgeon but he is a terribly sententious philosopher. The operating room, he said, was like a temple, the operation itself a kind of symphony, with its slow passages and its swift dashing trills. "I see it as a very sacred experience," he opined. How much Debbie had paid for this cross between sacrament and symphony concert was not disclosed.

Americans as a whole, however, fork out $4 billion a year for lotions, potions and pills to delay the ageing process. Two who seem to be doing very nicely. and Sandie Shaw, the authors of a best-selling book about how the use of daily doses of aspirin, vitamin daily doses of aspirin, vitamin multiminerals, beta-carotene, vitamin B6 and niacin (to list just a few) will intervene in the ageing process. To be brutal, neither struck me as much of an advertisement for their regime.

Old age can be sad, if you make it so. Nobody can leave behind the vigour of, youth without regret, or face death with an entirely equable temperament. All of us would like to be mentally alert of the moand physically mobile until the moment we pop off. Thomas's film showed how this entirely natural desire can be exploited, perverting what should be a time of reflection and relaxation into a hopeless race against the grim reaper. The second part. which promises to examine the serious science of ageing, should be well worth a look

Wearing an androgynous white costume, Jagger then read a long passage from Adonais, Shelley's elegy for Keats ("He is not dead, he doth not sleep/He hath awakened from the dream of life"). Hundreds of butterflies were released into the

This moment in July 1969, seen by millions in the film of the concert, sealed the connection between rock, revolution and Romantic poetry. And today, 200 years after the birth of Percy Bysshe Shelley, it remains tempting to equate him with a Jagger or a Jim Morrison. He seems a wholly contemporary figure, somehow trapped in the language and costume of Regency England.

So it is no accident that many of those associated with the recent revival of interest in Shelley were either university graduates in the 1960s, like the biographer Richard Holmes and the playwright Howard Brenton, or are identified with the ethos of that era, such as the journalist Paul Foot and the film director Ken Russell.

Fascinated by the parallels between 1968 and 1792, Holmes began researching his biography of Shelley in 1970: "I was possessed by him...the inner part of my life seemed completely bound up with the fate of this small Romantic circle, the post-revolutionary generation, who were trying to turn the principles of the 1790s - republi-

A pioneering work of "romantic biography" as well as a break-through in understanding of the English Romantics, Shelley: the Pursuit appeared in 1974. It acted as a stimulus for Foot's book Red Shelley and Brenton's play Bloody Poetry, and probably also triggered Russell's film Gothic.

Holmes's Shelley is "a darker and more earthly, crueller and more capable figure", quite different from the poet-god of 19th-century my-thology — typified by Matthew Arnold's "beautiful ineffectual angel beating his wings in vain".

In order to cultivate the angelic myth, the poet's family carefully suppressed any information which threatened it. Mary Shelley was prevented from writing her memours by an undertaking given to his octogenarian father, who supported her financially once she had returned from Italy. Her daughter-in-law, Lady Shelley, maintained rigid control of the poet's estate and reputation after Mary's death; she had a shring built at Poetrophe had a shrine built at Boscombe (where Mary's body and Percy Bysshe's heart are buried), and used every trick known to guardians of the flame - restricted access, tame biographers, destroyed and even forged texts — to preserve the sentimental fiction.

The cult of the versifying demi-god peaked in the decades around the centenary of his birth in 1892. In addition to Dowden's bowdlerised life and a slanted edition of the poetry, this period saw the installa-tion at University College, Oxford of the extraordinary Shelley memorial statue, which depicts a boyish mude corpse, mourned by a Muse. The Shelley Society, founded in 1886, took an equally devotional ap-proach. When George Bernard Shaw announced to fellow members that as an out-and-out Shelleyan, he was "a Socialist, an Atheist and a Vegetarian," two pious ladies resigned.
One of the most devout Victorian

Shelley-worshippers was Captain E.A. Silsbee of Salem, Massachusetts, whose attempt to prise some love letters from an old lady provided the model for Henry James's story The Aspern Papers. He failed to persuade her, but another relic he secured while in Italy has been made the centrepiece of the "Shelley's Guitar" exhibition which opens at the Bodleian Library in Oxford ccompanied by the poem "With a Guitar - To Jane", the instrument was given to Jane Williams in the spring of 1822, three months before the poet died at the age of 30 while sailing in Lerici, Italy. Other highlights of the Bodleian collection include Shelley's working note-books, the manuscript of "Ozymandias", two pages from a draft of Frankenstein, a miniature portrait of Mary and a love letter from her to Shelley. Extracts from their joint journal suggest that the much-discussed relationship between the two authors could often be collabo-

comes at the start of the bicentenary programme: more than 75 separate events, ranging from lectures to a boat trip around the Gulf of Lerici, in venues which can all boast some connection with the poet. Some commemorate a writer the Victorians would recognise; some a prototype Sixties radical. And others question the price paid by those who surrounded the artist.

There are ironies aplenty to be found in these celebrations, as there were in 1892. Shelley's outspoken republican views have happily not bonouring him; the Prince of Wales attended a fund-raising gala in Rome last month, and the Queen Mother (usually thought to be a Dick Francis fan) is the patron of the Keats-Shelley Memorial Association. Both Eton and University College, Oxford are marking their alumnus's anniversary, although he was wretched at the former and was sent down from the latter for deterred the royal family from a revolutionary toff, wholly supported by unearned family income. A feminist who deserted his first wife. and reacted with apparent coolness to news of her subsequent suicide. An author with populist ambitions, he wrote long, obscure poems, full of characters with Greek names.

The growth in his reputation over the last 25 years is reflected in the sheer number of events planned for the bicentenary year. And the diversity of these events should make it possible to do justice to the contrable from irony and paradox. He was dictions in his life and his poetry.

GALLERIES: LIVERPOOL

John Russell Taylor visits the Tate

Gallery's northern branch and finds many reasons to linger in Albert Dock

The least interesting and relevant thing about the main new installation at the Tate Gallery in Liverpool is its title, New Realities. At best it has the negative virtue of not meaning anything in particular.

In 1970 Andy Warhol devised a show for the Museum of the Rhode Island School of Design, called "Raid the loebox", in which he simply rummaged around in the storerooms to come up with an amazing trawl of the unfashionable, the dubious and the just plain daft.

Clearly someone has been doing the same for the Tate itself, with illuminating results. Even though the recent policy of annual rotation at head office has unearthed a number of long-unseen works. what is on show in London at any given time remains merely the tip of the iceberg. For "New Realities", attention has been focused on western European paintings and sculpture bought by or for the Tate between 1945 and 1968. Because this is a period just far enough away to look dowdy without yet quite making it to Modern Classic status, this means that most of the works unearthed have not been seen since soon after they joined the collection.

There are, it is true, one or two pieces, such as Peter Blake's pioneering assemblage The Toy Shop of 1962 and Richard Hamilton's collage painting Interior II of 1964, which have remained familiar, turned up in surveys of Pop Art and in the case of the Hamilton, frequently been recycled by the artist himself. Also, of course, the artists are British, and still very much with us. The French artists of tie same period are in no osition to be so vocal in the cause of their own perpetuation.

The Fifties, though of course no one knew at the time, were the tail end of the Ecole de Paris' greatness, and of the city's position, virtually unchallenged since the Impressionists, as the centre of everything worth observing in contemporary art. One's first reaction to some of the pieces on show in Liverpool is inevitably "Good Lord whatever possessed them to buy that?" But in the Fifties it was perfectly reasonable to acquire a Buffet selfportrait; now one has to remember that once every undergraduate record collection seemed to contain at least one Buffet cover for an Ella Fitzgerald songbook. Perhaps Buffet's reputation will never revive; it is admirably frank of the Tate to display such an

With other Paris-based real-ist painters, it is hard to be so certain. Hélion has been the subject of several recent revivals, and his later realistic work looks unexpectedly good. Probably, few people even know who Francis Gruber was, but his talent seems in Job (1944), a male nude against the Parisian town-scape, to transcend the limitations of his Socialist Realism esides this, there is the sort of free-form lyrical abstraction which grew up in Paris around the same time that Abstract Expression-ism grew up in New York. This has now acquired a sort of period charm, and maybe something more. De Stael is still approved of, if in a slightly patronising way, but it would be difficult to find a more desirable and painterly piece than his Landscape Study of

1952. And evidently it is time we took another look at such as Singier. Manessier and Intriguingly, one of the new

Korean painters on view up-stairs in Working with Na-ture, Hyong-Keun Yun, is producing work now which looks very like Soulages then. Meanwhile, a quick compari-son between these nearly for son between these nearly forgotten French artists and the still famous Abstract Expressionists such as Pollock, Rothko and Gorky, included in Myth-Making downstairs, suggests the scales are not so weighted in favour of New York as the current critical wisdom would have it. As revival time comes round for such other once-feted then forgotten movements as the Danish/Dutch CoBrA group. with its anticipations of Eighties Neo-Expressionism, and Italian Arte Povera, with its use of everyday material for fine art purposes, the Tate can congratulate itself again on its wisdom in acquiring good examples of, say, Karel Appel and Alberto Burri.

And when Op Art also has its turn, the gallery will no doubt be as happy to possess classic Vasarely and early Bridget Riley. In the same way it clearly is now delighted to have all the wonderful Stanley Spencer works gathered together on the ground floor. After all, even Spencer had his posthumous dip in reputation, though now he looks to have as good a claim as any to the title of Britain's greatest 20thcentury artist.

Dough to help female politicians rise

desktops and walls painted institutional cream. The hum of a computer can be heard, conversation is low, tasks are carried out briskly. A splash of brightness from modern prints dotted around adds to an ambience distinctly similar to an upmarket doctor's waiting room.

But then maybe that is fitting for the Washington offices of a feminist political action committee where plans for some major surgery on America's body politic are being laid which could change the character of Congress. Emily's List, which supports female Democrat candidates and is one of the most powerful political fundraising groups in America, is confident that this year money placed strategically right at the beginning of the electoral cycle will help to achieve the election of the first black female senator, increase female representation in the Senate from two to four or five, and raise the number of women in the House of Representatives from 29 to more

Emily is an acronym standing for Early Money is Like Yeast: cash support for women candidates at the start of a political campaign has an effect like yeast in breadmaking: it makes the dough rise. Or at least that is the theory behind an organisation which will have well over $3 million to spend on backing 30 or so women in congressional campaigns this year. Emily's List avoids the legally-stipulated $5,000 limit on political action committee donations to candidates by asking its members professional married women) to write their cheques out to candidates rather than to Emily's List. The list then "bundles" the cheques together and sends them on to candidates. Members have to commit themselves to writing three cheques of $100 each every electoral cycle. The list supports only female. Democratic party candidates who are pro choice in abortion - and only those who stand the best chances of winning. The reason for the recent rapid he offices are spartan, growth in the list's membership with formica-covered from 2,800 to more than 10,000. can be traced directly to last autumn's Senate judiciary committee hearings into whether Clarence Thomas should join the bench of the US Supreme Court Judge Thomas's nomination by President Bush for a Supreme Court post was a red rag to the Democrat bull. The drama that unfolded in the committee room was triggered by the actions of a Democrat-dominated pro choice lobby which disapproved of the conservative judge's suspected anti-abortion leanings.

Members of the lobby heard about a law professor. Dr Anita Hill, who claimed privately that she had been sexually harassed ten years earlier by the judge. They leaked the information to the committee and when the senators kept the allegation secret, apparently at Dr Hill's request, they leaked again, this time to the press.

The judge became a symbol to many of American man's exploitation of American woman and the sight of an all-male senate committee questioning Dr Hill about her allegation and then accepting Judge Thomas's nomination enraged not only feminists.

enator Barbara Mikulski. a Democrat from Maryland, said on American television recently: "Everywhere I went, people said, Why were there not more women? Why were there not women on the judiciary committee? Why didn't we see more women on the Senate floor?' And when I explained there are only two of us, it was, 'Wow!'."

Whether or not it was a Democrat- or feminist-inspired smear designed to embarrass President Bush, the Clarence Thomas case was a shot in the arm for groups campaigning for an increase in the number of women in Congress.

"The political upheaval from the hearings is still being felt and will have an effect in November," says Ellen Malcolm, the heiress and philanthropist who started Emily's List in 1985 and is clearly astounded at its growth in the last few

In March, there were signs that there could be an electoral breakthrough for women this year. A heavy turnout by women in the Illinois primaries led to a wave of victories for women candidates. The most dramatic success came when Carol Moseley Braun, a black with wide experience in Democrat senatorial nomination from Senator Alan Dixon, who had voted in favour of Judge Thomas. It was Senator Dixon's first defeat in 30 elections.

Ms Braun was inspired by the Thomas hearings to enter the race. Her campaign, built on the question: "Why don't we have more Illinois state politics, snatched the women in Congress?", went down well, not only with black women. In affluent Chicago suburbs she won 62 per cent of the white female vote. Women kept coming up to me saying they were tired of that boys' dub," Ms Braun said after her

Illinois may well be a harbinger for other states. Women are running in unprecedented numbers in congressional, state legislative and gubernatorial races. Close attention is being paid to high-profile Senate contests in New York, California and Pennsylvania, where powerful female candidates stand good chances of capturing Democrat senatorial nominations from male incumbents. Candidates include Barbara Boxer and the former San Francisco mayor Dianna Feinstein, both in California, and Lynn Yeakel in Penrsylvania.

Stiff battles are also under way in Arizona and Iowa. The anti-politics mood in the United States, which is already being exploited by Jerry Brown and Texan billionaire H. Ross Perot, is helping to build up momentum behind femule candidacies.

An opinion poil conducted for the USA Today newspaper last month suggests seven out of tenvoters believe America would be better off if there were more women serving in congress. "Women are seen as outsiders, outside the good ol boy network," says Donna Peterson, a West Point graduate who is contesting a House seat in Texas for the Republicans against the Democratic party incumbent.

iss Peterson's campaign is a case study. in how attitudes to women candidates have changed in just two years. She ran for the same seat in Texas in 1990 and quickly became known (courtesy of her opponent) as Captain Barbie Doll.

The Republican establishment gave her little support. "I was told I looked more like someone Charlie Wilson would date than someone who could run against him." she condescending Texan hierarchy has realised Miss Peterson is within striking distance of causing an upset and is backing her to the hilt

The issues uppermost in the minds of voters - education. environment and health care - are also in areas where women candidates are perceived to be strong. Female candidates also score points among voters for their seemingly kinder, gentler rhetoric. It will be a mistake, however, to believe that women are incapable of fighting tough when they like. In New York, an uncivil war between feminist groups has broken out over a decision by Emily's List to back Geraldine Ferraro, the former Democratic party vice-presidential nominee, over Elizabeth Holtzman, the city's comptroller general in charge of finance. The stand-off between the two feministcorrect' candidates and their supporters provoked a female journalist to dub the contest "cat fight of the New York corral".

living longer and staying healthier than at any time in the past we all know that. And a spinoff from this largely post-war phenomenon is that individuals are happy to become parents at an older age.

In 1991, Les Colley became Charlie Chaplin, Picasso, Denis Compton and Dr Christiaan Barnard, celebrated late fathers. But what of mothers? The idea of a new mother in her forties, lifties, or sixties is not easily accepted.

This double standard is being eroded - slowly. Kathleen Campbell became a mother by natural means in 1987, aged 55. But she is an exception.

A woman who looks after herself and is basically healthy now stands a good chance of living into her eighties or even longer. woman being treated at one of the London infertility centres. I have personal experience of the fight and have encountered both the bad and the good: on the one hand, the prejudices that still exist against allowing the older single woman to become pregnant; and on the other, the investigations that must rightly be made and the criteria which would-be mothers must fulfil before an infertility centre is satisfied that it is right to go ahead with treatment.

A pregnant 40 to 60-year-old first-time recipient of egg donation will be logged as an "elderly primigravida" (technically, a woman having her first child over 35 years of age). There are some who are inclined to disapprove. If a woman has missed her chance earlier on, why should she have it now? Can her physiology take it? Can her psychology

When mixed with the recipient's partner's sperm (or al-ready fertilised by it), three or four of the eggs or embryos will be transferred, preferably to the Fallopian tubes of the recipient; her womb will have been thickened to receive them with progesterone (and sometimes oestrogen, too). centres to prefer the donor to give her eggs anonymously (donors have no relationship in law with any child resulting from treatment): but there is another side: both donor and recipient often long to know one another's identity, and the future child may in time want to know its genetic mother.

Knowledge all round is more subtle and complex than anonymity - but can often be handled well on behalf of all by the older recipient with her mature perspective. And there is a special association between donor, recipient and child. One woman provides half the chromosomes, the other not only brings the child up but the child develops inside her. The child will certainly be a very real part of both the elderly primigravida

ASTHMA sufferers aged be-tween, 13 and 16 are invited to a special conference to be held tomorrow by the National International Students House (next to Great Portland Street underground station) in central London. The NAC's new colour newsletter, Blasti, is also aimed at teenagers with letters from young sufferers and articles on celebrities who have not let asthma hold them back (Stephen Fry features in the first), and is distributed to all secondary schools in the United Kingdom.

Teenagers interested in attending the conference should telephone Helen McGovern at the NAC on 071-226 2260 to apply for a place. Lunch and refreshments will be provided free. The NAC also operates an Ashma Helpline from lpm to 9pm on weekdays (telephone 0345 01 0203), which will deal with questions on any aspect of asthma and its treatment.

This year, British broadcasters

equated with diet and firness, not achievement and success," says Eileen Langsley, the foundation's deputy chair. But television influences both male and female attitudes: it is the big money spender,

Talbot, a Carnegie professor at Leeds Polytechnic, whose recent research concentrated on women's sports. "They say, we know what people want, and it's not women's sport. But until there is the sustained coverage, and in quantity and quality, you can't tell."

The Sports Council's recent consultative document, Women And Sport, says: "The message clearly given by national newspapers and television is that 'Sport is for men, and women play little part in the British sporting scene'."

Professor Talbot believes the message is damaging. "Apparently, girls have so few visible female role-models in sport, and hardly any from team games, that it is easy for them to infer that

"It's not just the quantity of the coverage, it's the quality."

Liz McColgan, the women's

10,000 metres world champion, points out that television coverage

does not just mean glory for individual athletes and the games

they play. "For anyone in sport, television appearances increase the chance of getting sponsorship. And sports themselves live on public

We do have more at stake. Men risk a loss of face: women a loss of femininity.

Men are chagnined if they blunder at the podium; women face humiliation either way. If we come across as commanding, our womanhood is called into question. If we reveal emotion, we are too hormonally driven to be taken

We're going to have to record that again," a weary radio producer said, rewinding the tape for the fifth time. "Your words are angry, but it's not coming through in your voice." In replacing lacerating speech with a literary scalpel, I had adopted a well-worn female strategy, used most famously by Victorian female reformers protesting against slavery and women's lowly status. I want to be doing something with the pen, since no other means of action in politics are in a woman's power." Harriet Martineau, the British journalist, wrote in

But while their literature makes compelling reading the suffrage movement didn't get under way until women 100k a public stand from the platform of the Seneca Falls Women's Rights convention. And while Betty Friedan's 1963 book. The Feminine Mystique, raised the consciousness of millions of women, the contemporary women's movement only began to affect social policy when Ms Friedan and other feminists started addressing the public.

Public speech is a more powerful stimulus because it is more dangerous for the speaker. An almost physical act, it demands projecting one's voice, hurling it against the public ear. Writing, on the other hand, occurs at one remove. The writer asserts herself from behind the veil of the printed page.

The evening of the Smithsonian speech finally arrived. I stood knock-kneed and green-gilled before 300 people. Was it too late to plead a severe case of laryngitis? I deared my throat ar J, to my shock, a

emboldened me. It was as if their attentive silence allowed me to make contact with my own muffled self. I began to speak, A stinging point induced a ripple of agreement. I told a joke and they laughed. My voice got surer, my delivery rising. A charge passed between me and the audience, uniting and igniting us both. That internal "boiling point" that Elizabeth Cady Stanton described was no ionger under "intellectual repression" And its heat, I discovered, could set many kettles to whistling.

Afterward, it struck me that I hadn't really proved myself a feminist until now. Until you translate personal words on a page into public connections with other people, you aren't really part of a political movement. I hadn't declared my independence until I was willing to declare it out loud. I knew public speaking was important to reform public life, but I hadn't realised the transformative effect it could have on the speaker herself. Women need to be heard not just to change the world. but to change themselves.
I can't say that this epiphany has made me any less anxious when approaching the lettern, but it has made me more determined to speak in spite of the jitters and more hopeful that other women will do the same. Toward that end, I'd like to make a modest proposal for the next stage of the women's movement. A new method of consciousness-mising: feminist

Emily Lau, democracy advocate: "We no longer happily accept an imposed choice of governor"

British — and undemocratic or Emily Lau, the sugges-tion that Chris Patten is considering an offer of the governorship of Hong Kong is an example of the colony being used as "a convalescent home for shell-shocked victims of political warfare at Westminster".

Ms Lau, one of 60 Hong Kong legislative councillors and the leading advocate of democracy for the colony, agrees that being the gover-nor of the UK's last major colony as British rule runs out is an unenviable task. Never before has Britain handed a territory to a communist state against the wishes of its people, who are dedicated capitalists. If Mr Patten, the chairman of the Conservative party and the former MP for Bath, should become the new governor, he will have to defend Hong Kong — the people and the financial centre against British indifference. Chinese rapaciousness and increasing panic in the colony. Ms Lau says. Of Hong Kong's population of 5.6 million, 98 per cent are Chinese. The governor has always been selected without consulting local people. But. Ms Lau says, "the people are increasingly assertive and politically active and are no longer happy to accept the benevolent dictatorship that used to prevail

She thinks the British have failed to understand how sensitive the choice of the last governor is for the residents. "Just before Christmas there were rumours that they might ask Lord David Wilson to retire. The Foreign Office said it was nonsense. A few weeks later he said he would resign.

The people were told that they would have to wait for the British elections before a decision could be made on a replacement. Ms Lau says: "Imagine the British being told they would have to do without a prime minister for six months pending the result of the American elections Unthinkable."

Through the British media, the Hong Kong Chinese have learned that there are several possibilities. "David Owen is one suggestion but he seems to have supported all three parties," she says. "He is also a loser. The Chinese don't like losers." And then there is Mr Patten: "He seems to be highly regarded but he has also lost his scar. We always seem to get secondbest, has beens or never-wases."

Ms Lau does not think the governorship should be seen as a reward. They say it is a plum job: you get twice the pay of the prime minister, £152,000, making you Britain's highest-earning civil servant. You get a Daimler with crowns in place of numberplates, a yacht and a life pension. But you also get five million worried Hong Kong Chinese."

The councillors have no influence over who will be next governor. But when Ms Lau came to London in February and visited the Foreign Office she says they did ask her whom she would like. "When I said somebody local, they said it was out of the question." The problem is that China views a local governor as a dangerous encouragement to Cantonese dissidents and Hong Kong nationalism.

Ms Lau believes the people of Hong Kong have not done enough to further their own cause. Most

'I think we should have had a referendum about what should happen in 1997'

Chinese, she says, are not naturally political. "Most of my parents' generation were refugees and thought they would one day go back to China. Then when they realised they couldn't, they were very grateful to the British for protecting them and looking after them," she says. "Many concentrated on making enough money to emigrate, which has always been a Hong Kong phenomenon and means that nobody ever thinks anything is permanent." The other problem is their ambivalence. "On the one hand, they are scared by communism. Most still have relatives in China and are keenly aware of the huge gap in freedom and living standards between the communist and capitalist systems. On the other hand, they are proud Chinese who do not want her father died when she was four and her mother went to work as a live-in domestic servant in Hong Kong. She ended up sharing three rooms with 30 relatives who have recently fled China. "We were taught absolutely nothing about politics at school," she says. "We didn't know what communism and democracy meant."

Ms Lau's conversion came when she went to the United States to study broadcast journalism. "I was hit by the Watergate crisis and that was the first time that I became politicised and realised that journalism is about reporting the hopes and fears of a community, not just the government line." At the South China Morning Post and then TVB, the Hong Kong television station, she worked as a reporter and producer of current affairs. She came to Britain in 1981, eventually becoming an assistant producer in the BBC.

Ms Lau has a British passport from her first marriage to a British journalist but when the Sino-British joint declaration was con-cluded in 1984, she went home. "Hong Kong is not a country. The people in Hong Kong are not proud of saying 'I am a Hong Kong person'. There is no proper word for it 'Hong Konger' sounds grotesque but Hong Kong is my only real home," she says. "I had to be there when it was in trouble."

When Margaret Thatcher visited Hong Kong, Ms Lau was among the first journalists to question her.
"Prime minister, two years ago you signed an agreement with China to deliver five million people into the hands of a communist dictatorship," she said. "Is that morally defensible? Or is it true that in international politics the highest form of morality is one's own

Mrs Thatcher, she says, replied that Britain had done its best. Now 40. Ms Lau gave up 20 years of journalism to stand last year in the first democratic elections to the legislative council, which makes laws and approves government expenditure but has no political say in Hong Kong's future. Of its 60 members, only 18 are directly elected: 17 are appointed by the government and 21 are members because of their positions. Ms Lau says: "I think we should have had a referendum [about what should happen in 1997]. I have no idea what the results would have been but at least then we would have had what the majority wanted. Nobody wants what we know what television needs. Five years ago, the Women's Tennis Association (WTA) showed that it had its act together, by producing a package of exciting players, properly scheduled tournaments and good crowds. It had a clear sports infrastructure, and it got results."

The WTA had a major advantage since women's tennis already had a place in international television schedules.

To ensure volleyball had tele-vision appeal, Mr Metcalfe put the teams into semi-aerobics gear and bussed spectators into the Albert Hall. He is unapologetic "A lot of sport is about looking good, male or female, and it helped people make the transition to enjoying

Women's sport organisers have also begun to package their spon. and not just for television.

t the All England Women's Lacrosse Association, the chief executive, Jacqueline Lunn, says they have concentrated more on extending the game from its traditional public school base, and that the results are showing. There's a practical reason too: unlike the men's game, we have no boundaries on the pitch, which makes it hard to televise. It's something the Women's International Federation has to consider,"

Earlier this year. Mr Martin of the BBC signalled some change. "We have to attract a lot more women to the screen to justify the amount of money and time we are spending on sport." he announced at a press launch, "It's a matter of policy rather than accident that we have two women presenters [Helen Rollason and Anna Walker - and we are looking for more."

Ms Rollason, the regular presenter of Spon on Friday, is a former PE teacher with impeccable television credentials in production as well as front of camera. She warns that, while pro-women's sports, she is a television animal. This is what upsets me. Only now are most women in sport -organisers and individuals realising what TV needs. For instance, last November, we curried the netball international. It was very well done, very well organised. But now it's up to the governing body to capitalise on the enthusiasm that was generated and come forward with their suggestions, not just wait for the BBC.

Christopher Warman on plans to revitalise No 1 Old Broad Street in the City's banking conservation area listed building would be demolished in a redevelopment announced by National Westminster Bank for its 1.25-acre site in the Bank conservation area in the heart of the City of London.

The sensitive site, in front of the NatWest tower and bound by Old Broad Street and Threadneedle Street, has 10 buildings, six of which are listed. The plans, by the Fitzroy Robinson Partnership, envisage retaining the façades of all the listed buildings, apart from the one at the junction of the two streets, as well as two banking halls.

After the controversy surrounding Lord Palumbo's proposed redevelopment of the Mappin & Webb site not far away, the plans are likely to attract criticism from conservationists, and the architects have mounted an exhibition at No 1 Old Broad Street (the building to be demolished) to explain them.

The architects believe that No 1, built in 1903, but altered since, is overshadowed by neighbouring buildings and no longer adequate to "command this vital corner".

Gordon Blythe of the Fitzroy Robinson Partnership says that they thought a total demolition would be wrong. He said there was instead a wonderful opportunity to create a strong, modern building at the end of a long vista to enhance the streetscape. The new building proposed for No I Old Broad Street has a rotunda that provides a public entrance to the shops that will form part of the scheme. A new shopping

Since the National Westminster Bank was formed in 1970, it has become one of the City's largest landowners and tenants, and has progressively acquired the buildings on this site, overlooked by the NatWest tower.

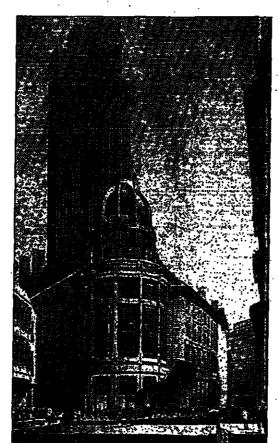

During the past three years, NatWest has undertaken extensive research into the possibility of refurbishing the buildings, while considering their functions, conservation and historic context and planning policies. NatWest says the overwhelming conclusion was that the properties have reached the end of their useful life.

David Edmonds, the general manager of NatWest's property management division, says the project combines high quality ar-chitectural conservation with excellent modern buildings to bring life to this prime area of the City. Anticipating conservationist criticism of the proposals as "facadism", the architects argue that the retention of the interiors of the listed buildings is not justified because they have no historic or architectural relevance.

Mr Blythe said the proposals, prepared over the last 18 months, kept the scale and character of the conservation area. A planning ap-plication will be submitted shortly. with the likelihood of an enquiry into the scheme to follow.

Aerocity starts up

☐ The first phase of the 99-acre Roissypole aerocity at Roissy Charles de Gaulle Paris airport. which will be Europe's largest airport business centre, was completed last week with the inauguration of Continental Square, a 240,000 sq ft office development, with an investment value of more than £40 million. The square was designed by Seifert International, the British architects, and developed by Generale Continentale Investissements, together with GA, the French construction group. Rents, through Bourdais and Auguste Thouard, the agents, are £14.50 a sq ft.

☐ Maples, the furnishing store founded 150 years ago, is to return to its West End birthplace with the purchase of space at 145. Totten-ham Court Road. London. The 24,000 sq ft site, now occupied by Saxon Hawk will reopen as Maples of London in June, creating jobs for some 30 people.

City scope

☐ A City of London site with planning permission for 85,000 sq ft of offices, owned by London Regional Transport and close to Cannon Street, has been sold under a 199-year lease to private investors in a deal put together by Garry Coaley, chairman of City and Provincial Properties. The price has not been disclosed.

HENRY B. JAMES CONTROL TO THE PROPERTY OF THE 1.09 7250

Bargains beyond dreams in country houses tastefully modernised. It retains its period features, has panoramic rural views, is totally secluded and approached by a long drive. It is about an hour away from London, with four reception rooms, six bedrooms and four bathrooms, a tennis court, and paddock. The ten-acre grounds include a staff flat, out-buildings, mature gardens, stables, å three-bedroom lodge, and cottage. Offers of £800,000 invited." This is how an advertisement for the perfect English country house might read. Prescient readers will already have realised that the house does not exist. Ian Stewart, from the estate agents Savills, has put together this description of his dients' dream house.

Those more interested in reality can learn from Savills. This outline of the standard dream also reveals what is perceived to be less than perfect. Such features are disregarded or positively marked down in valuations, though to buyers with a different view of perfection, they could be bonuses. Take whirlpools, saunas, and croquet lawns, none of which feature in the ideal country house. To install a whirlpool might cost £10,000, a sauna £3,000 and a croquet lawn £5.000. Yet Savills adds no value to a house which has such features, because most buyers are not interested. A squash court would cost £40,000 to install, but adds only £15,000 to the value of a house. Garden landscaping might cost £25,000, but would add only £15,000 to a house price. A good security system costs £5,000 to install, but only £3,000 if already in place. An outdoor heated swimming pool costs £25,000 to build. adding only £20,000 in value. There are also bargains to be had for those who remain open-minded about the surroundings of their country house. Five to ten acres has become the perfect amount of land. adding 10 per cent to the price of a house. In the South-East, Dawn Carritt from Jackson-Stops & Staff calculates that such land would cost £3,000 an acre. The price falls, however, if you are prepared to take on more land, to the price of agricultural land at £1,500 an acre. Woodland, especially if tatty, is perceived as a bore by most, because of the work needed. Jack-son-Stops & Staff is selling Venters in Rusper, West Sussex, for £450,000, with woodland as an inexpensive bonus. There are about four acres on sale with a restored I 6th-century timber-framed country house, with reception hall, drawing room, sitting room, study, five bedrooms, two bathrooms. breakfast room and kitchen. "This is very good value if you like woodland," says Ms Carrit. " You get four acres at a nominal additional cost to the property, probably not much more than £500 an acre."

There are savings to be made on properties with rights of way, which "frighten off buyers" according to Mr Stewart. "Prices will be proportionately down if they are bang across the lawn." he says. "But they might be rarely used."

Near Tring in Henfordshire, Incombe Wick House is part of the Stocks Farm complex, a group of eight 16th and 17th-century farm buildings. It would not qualify as an ideal country house for several reasons, not least its small garden, and is priced accordingly at £275,000. But to some that might be an advantage, since the house sits at the foot of Chiltern Hills, and to the north, south and east lie some 4,000 acres of National Trust land forming the Ashridge Estate,

A taste of village life

A cottage in Nedging Tye sounds romantic and is just that. Wolsey House, near Hadleigh in Suffolia. has just gone on the marker for £175,000 and is likely to be snapped up. It stands back from the road at the end of its own gravel driveway, bordered by mature laurel hedges, on the outskirts of the tiny village (which has no shops). An oak door leads through the hall, to the drawing room with its inglenook fireplace and oak beams. There is a study, and kitchen with room for a table, a utility room. and large downstairs bathroom with a Victorian style, mahogany panelled bath. Upstairs there are three bedrooms, a dressing room, and a shower mom.

The market town of Hadleigh is five miles away Stowmarket is ten miles away and on the main line to London's Liverpool Street Station. The train takes about an hour and ten minutes. Agents: Abbotts (047.3 280645).

Duty on educational needs

Regina v Isle of Wight County Council, Ex parte A S Same v Same, Ex parte R S Before Mr Justice Schiemann [Judgment April 15]

Where a local education authority had made an assessment, under section 5 of the Education Act 1981, that a child for which it was responsible had special educa-tional needs and had prepared and served a proposed statement on the parents of the child, pursuant to section 7(3), there was no obligation on the authority thereafter to make a statement, under section 7(1), of the child's special educational needs.

Where a local education aupursuant to section 7(1) of a child's special educational needs, entitled to discontinue maintaining such a statement. either pursuant to the provisions in paragraph 6 of Part II of Schedule I to the 1981 Act, or if the parents requested the au-thority to make an assessment under section 5, whereupon the same procedure provided for in the Act took effect as upon the

Mr Justice Schiemann so held in a reserved judgment in the Queen's Bench Division refusing AS and RS for, inter alia. certiorari to quash the decision of the county council on December 12, 1991, that it would no longer maintain a statement in respect of A S and that it would not make a final statement in respect of R S.

Mr John Friel for the applicants; Mr Philip Havers for the

MR JUSTICE SCHIEMANN said that by virtue of section 2 of the 1981 Act every local authority had to keep under review the arrangements made by them for "special educational provision", a term of an which was defined in section 1(3).

His Lordship said that it was clear from consideration of section 5 of the Act that a local authority was entitled to come to a decision that it was not required to determine the special educational provision for a child. If it point in moving on to serve a proposed statement under

If, however, the authority did not decide that it was not required to determine the special educa-tional provision that should be made for a child, it by no means followed that the authority was of followed that the authority was of the opinion that it should determine the special educational provision that should be made for the

keep an open mind on the point and make a proposed statement and serve it on the parent under

The wording of section 7(1) made it clear that the authority was only empowered to make a the statement, not at the time of serving a copy of the proposed ient, it was of the opinion that it should determine that special educational provision should be made for the child.

It would perhaps be unusual for an authority, in the absence of representations from the parents, not to make a statement once it had served a copy of the proposed statement but there was no legal inhibition on adopting such a course even in the absence of any underlying change in the facts. Once the authority decided it was not required to determine the special educational provision, it had to notify the parent of his right of appeal to the Secretary of State for Education and Science

For similar reasons, once a proposed statement had been served and the parents had made representations about its contents, the authority was not obliged to make a statement. There would still be an obligation to notify the parents of the right of

Where the parents of a child for whom the authority maintained a asked the authority to make a new assessment under section 5, then if the authority made such an same as it was after the initial assessment the authority could decide that it was not required to determine the special educational provision that should be made for

That would give the parents the right of appeal under section 5(6), or the authority could move to the the consequences following from that. Although the parents would initiate the procedure under section 9(2) it could result in a state of affairs that no statement was maintained, although it might have done so with a view to amending the provisions of the existing statement.

It was clear that the Act pro-vided a mechanism for the authority itself to initiate any change it might wish to make to a situation governed by an exisiting statement that mechanism was in paragraph 6 of Part II of Schedule 1.

London Borough Council Before Mr Justice Potter [Judgment April 15]

A local education authority which, in furtherance of its duty under the Education Act 1981 to make provision for children with special educational needs, sent boys with emotional and behavioural difficulties to an independent school approved by the Secretary of State for Education and Science was not liable in negligence for sexual abuse which was committed on the boys by the headmaster of that school

Mr Justice Potter so held in the Queen's Bench Division giving judgment in open court after hearings in chambers in three actions for damages arising out of the placement of boys at a school in Shropshire which had sub-sequently been closed following the conviction of the headmaster on various charges of buggery and sexual assault against pupils. In the first action an order of In the first action an order of Master Topley striking out a claim in negligence against Harrow London Borough Council as showing no reasonable cause of showing no reasonable cause of one remove from the damac, which occurred and the acts

Lacey v Harrison

Before Judge Dobry, QC [Judgment April 14]

A court had discretion to order that a defence to a personal injuries action should be struck out unless the defendant agreed to undergo a medical examination to investigate whether he was

cident where he was the only witness for his pleaded defence.

Judge Dobry, QC, sitting as a judge of the Queen's Bench Division so held in allowing an appeal by the plaintiff, Christopher Charles Lacey, against a decision of Judge Goodman in the Northampton District Pagistre

Northampton District Registry, refusing to order that the defence be struck out unless the defen-dant, Matthew William Harri-

ment was given in open court after a hearing in chambers.

Mr Roderick Noble for the

HIS LORDSHIP said that there was a well established rule that a party to a personal injuries

action, whether plaintiff on a claim or defendant on a counter-

It seemed that the judgment in Cosgrove v Baker (unreported, December 14, 1979 CA) similar claim was allowed and in the third an order of pre-action discovery against the council was Mr Frederic Reynold, QC and

Mr Simon Carr for the plaintiffs in the first action; Mr Frederic Reynold, QC and Mr Richard Clayton for the plaintiffs in the second and third actions: Mr Patrick Hamlin for the local MR JUSTICE POTTER said that since all the plaintiffs at all times remained in the custody and care of their parents and none was in the care of the council, the council's statutory duties in respect of the plaintiffs were effectively limited to assessment of educational need and provision of an appropriate place. It was for the secretary of state to decide upon what criteria the approval of independent schools was to be given and no indepen-dent role or requirement was conferred upon the local authority for that purpose.

as a duty to take precautions against the occurrence or repeution of such harm by means of a system of monitoring and followup, which was not expressly anticipated or provided for in the scheme regulating the local authority's functions in educawere the three laid down in Caparo Industries plc v Dickman [1990] 2 AC 605, 617-618): foreseeability, proximity and the justice of imposing liability. It was difficult to see that assaults of the type complained of upon pupils at the school were foreseeable at least in the absence of any specific complaint coming to the knowledge of the local authority. The local authority's contact with the plaintiffs was wholly in the context of assessment and context of physical control or relationship of proximity in respect of the pupil's physical safety and welfare ever existed by reason of the local authority's statutory

Regina v Poplar Coroner, Ex asked for the ambulance service. Before Lord Justice Warkins and [Judgment April 13] Where the medical cause of a death was accompanied by concurrent events which themselves might be a cause of death. there was a case for considering whether the death was not natural and whether an inquest should be

The Queen's Bench Divisional Court so held in granting an application from Mrs Doris Thomas for judicial review of the decision of the Poplar Coroner. Mr Douglas Chambers, that no inquest should be held into the death of her daughter. Mavis Thomas, aged 17.

Mr Edward Fitzgerald for the applicant: Mr Terence Coghlan

MR JUSTICE TUDOR EV-ANS said Miss Thomas was a lifelong suffer from asthma. She had suffered an asthmatic attack about 1am on April 9, 1989 and a neighbour had dialled 999 and

The neighbour got a recorded reply: "There is no one here at present. Please hold on and we

It was decided to take Miss Thomas to hospital by car but on the way she collapsed and the car was stopped while attempts were made to revive her. The police were called and one of them dialled 999 at 1.16am urgently requesting an am-bulance. An ambulance did arrive at 1.40am but it was too late and

The coroner had decided that death resulting from status asthmaticus, a condition with a considerable natural mortality, was death by natural causes, and no inquest was required.

That approach was not correct.
The coroner should have asked himself whether on the undisputed evidence there might death aggravated by lack of care.

Minor amendments would be made to Practice Direction (Court of Appeal: Civil Division: Short Warned List) (The Times March 9, 1992; [1992] 1 WLR 371) to avoid any possible misundayararding as to the patter of understanding as to the nature of counsel's duty once an appeal assigned to the short warned list was called on for hearing.

Lord Donaldson of Lymington, Master of the Rolls, sitting in the Court of Appeal with Lord Justice Balcombe and Lord Justice Butler-Sloss on April 13, republished the practice direction as

Miah v Secretary of State for the Home Department

It was not appropriate to go to the Court of Appeal when fresh grounds of appeal came to light many months after that court had dealt with the matter and when the constitution of the court had

The Court of Appeal (Lord Justice Dillon, Lord Justice Stocker and Lord Justice Nolan) so stated on April 3 in dismissi a renewed appeal for leave to move for judicial review by Mr Hassan Miah against the decision of the Secretary of State for the Home Department refusing to reconsider the position of Mr Miah's alleged son, Jarif, following a DNA test.

LORD JUSTICE DILLON said that Mr Miah had applied for judicial review in December 1990. That application was re-fused but was renewed in the Court of Appeal (Lord Justice Mustill, Lord Justice Balcombe and Lord Justice Bingham) on May 22, 1991, when it was

However, Mr Miah's counsel sought to re-open the case on tresh grounds and came directly to the Court of Appeal relying on a passage of Lord Donaldson, Master of the Rolls in M v Home Office (The Times December 2, 1991; [1992] 2 WLR 73).

His Lordship could well see the advantage of a renewed applica-tion being made to the Court of Appeal in which the same constitution had recently been dealing. It was quite different when the application was made months after the Court of Appeal had last dealt with the matter on grounds not then considered and when the constitution of the coun had changed.

Children's safety is often the last thing on an architect's mind. Rachel Kelly looks ore than 250,000 children a year are taken to hospital as a result of accidents at home. Simple design improvements and safety measures could reduce the number of accidents by a third. The argument for developers. architects, designers and housebuilders to build safer homes is a compelling one.

To date only one housebuilder markets what it describes as a "supersafe" home, and that has only been available since last month.

"I think it's the first developer I've ever heard of who has designed a house with the under-fives in mind," says Dr Hugh Jackson, the founder of the Child Accident Prevention Trust.

The three-bedroom detached Tudor-style house was developed with help from the trust and the child health department at Newcastle university. The first example of the genre is on show in

Cochrane Park, a new housing dev-elopment of 60 houses in a suburb of Newcastle. It targets the main causes of accidents involving young children, which include falls down stairs and scalds in the kitchen.

"Though these are not the causes of the most serious injuries, which include things like falling out of windows, they are the most common accidents," Dr Jackson says. The house developed by housebuilders Bellway Homes has not only stair-gate fittings at the top and bottom of stairs, but an extra lower-level handrail small enough for a child's hand.

The kitchen has more discreet features such as two lockable cupboards, one under the sink for storing bleach, another in which to secure medicines. There is a fridge lock and small cushions to fit onto sharp corners on furniture; a fire blanket: and a first-aid kit. The blanket is essential for the dousing of, for example, chip-pan fires.

All sockets in the house are twinpoled, so when switched off even a screwdriver inserted into one of the pins would not produce a shock. The windows on Bellway's home can be limited to an opening of four inches. All fires have fireguards and the house's electrical system has trip circuit breakers to guard against electrocution.

The structure of the house complements such gadgets and helps mitigate against accidents. Glass doors have been avoided, especially near the bottom of stairs, and outside steps are wide with bullnosed edges to avoid hazardous, sharp angles.

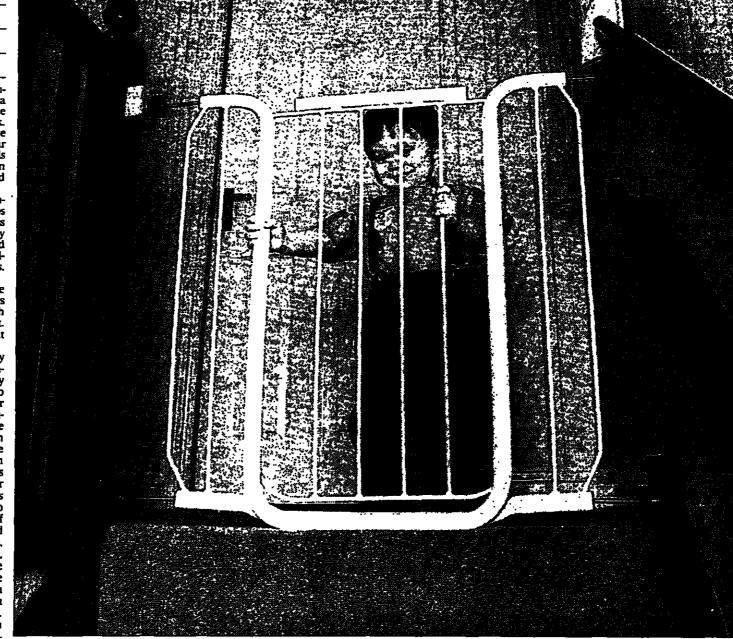

But the single most effective measure is a smoke detector, says Dr Jackson. "It reduces the death rate from fires by 70 per cent. People die not from flames but from asphyxiation." A smoke detector is not only effective but also unobtrusive, unlike many of the other home safety measures which may be offensive to the purist interior designer or architect's eye. It is the A smoke design cost which detector reduces the complicates the simple equation that safe homes better eoual homes. Architects have preferred to leave the design of homes unscathed by such gadgets, although this may, in some cases, be out of ignorance rather than choice. "I remember a recent competition held to design a modern home," Dr Jackson says. "The designs were incredible in terms of the dangers they created stairs without risers, a balustrade without vertical bannisters, stairs ending by a window, balconies with horizontal railings so that a child could dimb over them. Then I showed some architects slides I had of children who had had accidents. They were astonished."

Dr Liz Towner, a senior research associate from the department of child health at Newcastle university, agrees that safety for the underfives is a subject most architects have not contemplated.

Home guard: a stair-gate and a second lower-level handrail are simple precautions to prevent children from falling down stairs

"I think the attitude is that 'after all kids have always lived in homes and they must have survived'," she

When architects do consider the subject they are torn between a desire for safety and its cost. financially and aesthetically. External structural changes can be incorporated at no great loss to the overall design. Some internal features are as unobtrusive as the smoke alarm, such as plate glass which doesn't shatter into shards. for example. But other internal eatures suffer from poor design of the components.

"If such safety features' components became more standard, more companies would produce the components and the design would improve," says Ian Colquhoun, the Royal Institute of British Architects' spokesman on housing design. "I hope that Bellway's idea of a safe home will catch on." Part of the problem for architects is that clients neither expect nor wish to pay for safety features focusing on young children at the moment, though more general safety is a priority.

"Architects are not being asked to incorporate such features by their dients," Mr Colquhoun says. "Requirements are set out in client briefs and most briefs do not call for that type of provision. There are so many other factors affecting the design of housing, including cost."

A house both safe and stylish remains an ideal, one which may yet become a challenge for architects. Meanwhile, the question for most parents is whether a house's appearance or a child's safety is more important. Such a question should need no answer.

THE defence ministry is selling HMS Vincent which, despite its title, it is not a ship.

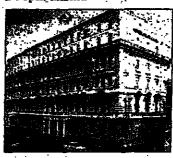

The name refers to 37 to 41 Queen's Gate Terrace, a row of Victorian terrace houses in South Kensington, the latest defence ministry real estate to hit the property market. The MoD will not discuss prices, but market speculation suggests a figure of £10 million. On sale to the rear are three properties fronting Petersham Mews.

The six-storey Grade 11 midnineteenth century houses were originally built as private houses. in 1863 the houses were converted into the South Kensington Hotel. In 1954 the MoD moved in and used the building as a hostel for navai personnel in London.

The complex could be converted for a variety of uses, Humberts, the agents, say, including a return to the building's original residential purpose. As office space, it would yield 94,000 square feet.

The MoD is also selling a series of terrace houses in Hendon, north-west London Number 15 Cranfield Drive, 2 Gaydon Lane. 13 and 19 Heywood Avenue, and 13 Tangmere Way are Fifties-built ex-RAF married quarters. Countrywide surveyors are selling them by tender and hope for about £30,000

The properties are just some of the disposals planned by the MoD over the next five years. It plans to sell £500,000 million of defence estate. At the moment, the ministry has 36,876 married quarters on its books, which is already 12 per cent less than it had in 1981. Over the next three years it plans to sell a further 1,500 homes, some of which will be offered to MoD personnel - and some will go on the open market.

8.00 The Burled Mirror: The Virgin and the Bull

Mexican writer Carlos Fuentes presents a five-part discourse on the cultural interaction of Spain and Latin America. passionate, Fuentes is a formidable anchorman. In tonight's programme he guides us through the history of Spain from the cave diversity which embraced Christian, Jewish and Arab strands and superimposed on the New World. Fuentes brings fresh insights to such familiar rituals as the bull fight, the flamenco and the celebration of the Virgini Many, while charting the rise of Islam and the Renaissance spirit which took Spain across the seas. Produced by Peter Gill, whose credits go back to Kenneth Clark's

9.00 World Snooker. David Vine presents further coverage of the contest between Jimmy White and Tony Drago (560261)

9.40 Mr Wakefield's Crusade

 CHOICE: Bernice Rubens's bizarrely comic mystery is brought to television by producer Ruth Caleb and director Angela Pope, the team behind the memorable Aids drama Sweet As You Are. Peter Capaldi plays Mr Wakefield, the bored young millionaire who turns amateur detective when a man drops dead in a post office queue. Convinced that he has stumbled on a case of murder, Wakefield sets out after the truth and is led into by-ways he could never have imagined. Any feeling that the story is too silly to bother with is more than offset by the crazy logic of the piece and a narrative so Richard Griffiths shines as the porter of Wakefield's luxury apartment block and Michael Maloney lends a sinister presence as the dead man's so far unexplained friend. 7.00 The Cook Report CHOICE: The only regret about Roger Cook's television show is that it tends to throw up fewer of those wildly enjoyable doorstep confrontations that so enlivened his radio programmes. But Cook has long moved away from exposes of dodgy insurance salesmen, time-share touts and cowboy builders and now occupies territory doser to that of BBC2's Taking Liberties. Indeed one of the subjects of Cook's new series, the nine young fusiliers killed by American friendly fire in the Gulf, was featured on Taking Liberties only a few weeks ago. Cook claims to have the real story. Other injustices to be investigated include bullying in the British army, drug dealing and the pillaging of exotic birds. A camera-smashing incident in Amsterdam, as Cook squares up to the alleged Mr Big of a cattle fattening scam, is well up to standard (3261)

9.00 Dispatches: The Bulgarian Dilemma

CHOICE: The town of Kosloduy is hardly a household name outside Bulgaria but this sobering report suggests that it soon could be and for the worst reasons. Kosloduy houses siv nuclear reactors. Atomic Energy Authority has proposed that four of them should be shut down. The film reveals that safety systems are inadequate, maintenance has been neglected and the staff lacks skill and motivation. Spare parts once supplied by the Soviet Union no longer arrive. The Bulgarian dilemma is this. The reactors produce 40 per cent of the country's electricity. To close them would senously damage an already shaky economy. To repair them would mean a huge increase in the national debt. To leave them as they are is to risk another Chemobyl (588532)

CHOICE: Great fun to read as a novel and, judging from episode one, it is going to be episode one, it is going to be great fun to listen to in Jeremy Front's sus-part adaptation. Ideally, not a single line of Waugh's dialogue should be tampered with. Test the text by reading it aloud, and you will find that it is tailor-made for radio legency. will find that it is trance—made for radio. Jeremy Front's script is true to the spirit of the book, but not always to the letter. There is no reason why
